WILL CONTEST BY-ELECTION IN VANCOUVER

Conservatives Decide to Put Candidate for Legislature in Burrard

PARTY CONVENTION CALLED FOR JUNE

VANCOUVER, Nov. 2 (P).—For the first time since the Conservatives won North Vancouver on November 3, 1930, official candidates of that party will contest seats in the British Columbia Legislature in the by-elections of Vancouver-Burrard and Ombéca.

The party will also hold its long-delayed Provincial convention on June 10 and 11 in Vancouver. It is presumed that a leader will be appointed.

These decisions were made at a meeting today of the executive of the British Columbia Conservative Association. Date for the annual meeting of the association was fixed for December 14 in Vancouver.

STILL LEADER

Dr. S. F. Toimie, former Premier, is still leader of the Provincial Conservative Party, but he informed the association after the 1933 elections that, having been appointed leader by a convention, he would present his resignation to a similar assembly when it was called.

About forty members of the executive, representing all sections of the Province, attended today's meeting. It was decided to continue publicly and organization work undertaken strenuously in the past year, and the view was expressed by executive members that the work of the past year was largely responsible for the fact that British Columbia elected five members in the recent Dominion elections and polled substantial votes in other constituencies.

The decision of the last annual meeting of the Conservative Association was that all efforts should be bent towards the then pending Federal contest, and that purely Provincial matters should be left in abeyance until it was over.

ASKS MINISTER TO LEAVE POST

Difference of Opinion Over Sanctions Causes Political Crisis in Australia

CANBERRA, Australia, Nov. 2 (P).—An apparent difference of opinion in the Australian Cabinet over the question of application of sanctions against Italy caused a political crisis today.

James Lyons, Prime Minister, asked William Morris Hughes, Vice-President of the Executive Council, to resign because of apparent opposition to sanctions.

In a book, "Australia and the War Today," Hughes said that Australia was not in a position to resist any attack from Italy and that Great Britain would be too busy to protect Australia.

One passage said: "Economic sanctions are either an empty gesture or mean war."

REQUESTS RESIGNATION

Lyons sent Hughes this telegram: "This diametrically opposed Government policy, challenges its wisdom and sincerity, strikes at the root of our support of the League and loyal discharge of our covenant obligations and attacks sanctions as futile and warlike. Your position in the Cabinet appears untenable. . . I therefore respectfully request your resignation."

Should Hughes refuse to resign, it is believed Lyons might submit the resignation of the entire Cabinet to the Governor-General.

KIDNAPPER SENT TO PENITENTIARY

Michael McCordell Given Twelve Years for Part in Labatt Abduction

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 2 (P).—Michael McCordell, confessed kidnapper of John S. Labatt a year ago last August, was sentenced to twelve years in Kingston Penitentiary when he appeared in magistrate's court today.

McCordell was the third man to be sentenced for the abduction of the wealthy London brewer. David Meisner, former Cincinnati bookmaker, and Jack Bannock, Windsor beer runner, are already serving fifteen-year terms. McCordell was chief Crown witness in the trial of Bannock, absolving Meisner of all blame in the crime in his testimony.

Montana Sportsmen Seek to Liberate Ducks Imprisoned in Thin Ice
PLENTYWOOD, Mont., Nov. 2 (P).—On an errand of mercy, sportsmen here rushed to Goose Lake, four miles south of Westby, on the Montana-North Dakota border, to liberate hundreds of quacking ducks imprisoned in thin ice along the shoreline. Because the ice was not thick enough to bear the weight of a man, the rescue work in the biting cold weather was made more difficult.

The wind and snow which swept across Northeastern Montana out of the North sent countless Canadian Northland ducks and geese over this area. The flight, just ahead of the storm, was continuous for thirty-six hours. Old-timers said they believed it was the largest single flight of migratory birds ever seen by white men in this area.

Conservative Gains in Municipal Voting Lead to Predictions

LONDON, Nov. 2 (P).—Predictions of a Government victory in the national elections on November 14 came tonight from two Cabinet members in the wake of significant Conservative gains in municipal elections.

SWORN DURING RIDE ON TRAIN

Hon. Vincent Massey Takes Oath of Office as High Commissioner

ON BOARD SPECIAL TRAIN EN ROUTE TO QUEBEC, Nov. 2 (P).—Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner to London, was sworn into office in Prime Minister Mackenzie King's private railway car today.

Mr. and Mrs. Massey were guests of Mr. King on the journey down to Quebec for the installation of Lord Tweedsmuir as Governor-General. On the train also was E. J. Lemaire, Clerk of the Privy Council, who mentioned to Mr. King that Mr. Massey must be sworn in before leaving to assume his new duties.

The Prime Minister suggested it be done at once, so a Bible was produced, and the oath administered by Mr. Lemaire in the presence of Mrs. Massey and Mr. King.

It is the first occasion on which a Canadian High Commissioner to London has been sworn in on a train.

LONDON, Nov. 2 (CP-Havas).—C. J. Meisner and H. F. Broadbent, Australian aviators, each piloting his own plane, hopped off from Croydon today on a joint flight to Australia.

WEATHER IS NOT CHANGED

Pacific Northwest Continues To Shiver as Forecasters Raise No Hopes

VANCOUVER, Nov. 2 (P).—No immediate relief from the unusual cold snap, which has held British Columbia in its grip for five days, was seen tonight by E. B. Shearman, Dominion meteorologist.

At 11:00 o'clock tonight the official temperature was 28 degrees above zero, just two degrees higher than at the same time last night, but falling slowly with the possibility of a drop of several degrees during the coldest hours around 6 o'clock in the morning.

COLD, SNOW WIDESPREAD
Early this morning the temperature dropped to 20 degrees in Vancouver, the coldest yet recorded during the siege. Other parts of British Columbia reported zero and near-zero marks.

Grand Forks proved to be the coldest spot in the province with a recording of zero, while at Vernon 5 degrees above was registered.

FURTHER SHOCKS ARE NOT EXPECTED

Additional Earth Disturbances Felt Over Large Area in East—No Damage Results

NEW YORK, Nov. 2 (P).—Despite mild "after shocks" of yesterday's earthquake recorded this morning, seismologists expressed the belief tonight that the tremors were over for the time being in the Eastern Canadian and United States area originally affected.

Occurring at the epicentre of the earthquake, in the Lake Michigan district of the Province of Ontario, today's disturbances were felt in parts of Upper New York State as well as in Canada.

Today's movements, were especially noted at Rochester and Buffalo, N.Y., and at Ottawa, Kitchener, Owen Sound and North Bay, Ont.

Several hotel guests were overcome by smoke, but were quickly revived.

Flee From Fire In Night Attire

CALGARY, Nov. 2 (P).—Twenty guests were forced to flee in their night attire, with the thermometer registering eleven below zero, when fire destroyed the Hotel and a cafe at Rockyford, Alta., early today. Property loss was estimated at $15,000.

Several hotel guests were overcome by smoke, but were quickly revived.

Unprecedented Rain May Halt Advance Of Italian Troops

ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 2 (CP-1 Avas).—Rain, unknown at this season in Addis Ababa within the memory of the oldest inhabitants, began falling in great, driving sheets today. If this downpour continues and affects larger sections of the country, it is certain to hinder the Italian advance.

Sight Is Restored By Quake

TORONTO, Nov. 2 (P).—Sixty-three-year-old Mrs. Kate Mitchell saw clearly for the first time in three years as she turned on the electric lights just after the earthquake yesterday shook her King street house, she revealed today. The tremor was like a message "direct from heaven" for her, the white-haired woman said, convinced the shock restored her sight.

For three years, Mrs. Mitchell said she had been able "only to see shadows." She could not leave the house without aid of another person.

"Thank God I can now see," she said—"the long hours of night are over."

HELENA FACES NEW THREAT

Dropping Mercury Adds to Sufferings of Earthquake-Stricken City

HELENA, Mont., Nov. 2 (P).—Somewhat hardened to the incessant jolting of the earth, Helena's weary populace tonight eyed falling mercury meters apprehensively as they watched earthquake charts.

As night fell, the temperature dropped steadily towards the zero mark, and the city's entire relief forces, already functioning efficiently, were marshalled to fullest.

With scores of homes uninhabitable, relief workers huddled their charges in relief shelters and heated railway cars as winter struck with severe temperatures Northern Montana points, a few hundred miles away.

ICY BLASTS
Icy blasts were sweeping down the east slope of the Rockies. Outbank border of the Glacier National Park, reported 30 degrees below. Likewise, the winds swept downward from Chinook near the Canadian border, where 20 degrees below was recorded. Those winds directed a path towards Helena.

A heavy earth movement, accompanied by a deep rumbling, shook the city shortly before noon for three seconds, but added damage was negligible.

Nearly 450 homeless, many of them children, including orphans, were bundled in safe shelters, but officials said there might be acute suffering if temperatures dropped to the severe points.

DEAN OF CONSULS DEAD

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 2 (P).—Antonio Raphael Velez, sixty-three, dean of the consular group, died last night. At the time of his death he was consul for Spain, Portugal, Peru, Mexico, Argentina and Ecuador.

There may be no rash tampering hereafter with the finances or territorial laws, or the consequences may prove disastrous to the prosperity of the Colonies.

No wonder that Sir James, in 1896, thought that the Union of the two Colonies should be the occasion for mourning. The very thing that he had dreaded was happening. The fine balance of political economy that he had devised for the progress and prosperity of the Colonies was being destroyed.

He saw clearly that it meant a Statement of Italy's Views on Settling War Outlined in Communication Handed to Laval While Reports From Ethiopia Indicate Italian Advance on Whole Northern Front

Ethiopian Delegation Makes Appeal to League for Funds

ROME, Nov. 3 (P).—Full troop movements in the conquered Province of Tigre in Northern Ethiopia were reported early today by Italian correspondents, indicating the Italian advance on Makale will extend over the entire northern front. Blackshirts and native Eritrean troops alike were on the move toward the Ethiopian stronghold, the dispatches said. They were joined by the warriors of Gas Gussa, the Ethiopian chieftain who deserted Emperor Haile Selassie.

At the same time, the correspondents reported that Italian planes on the southern front had launched a blasting attack on Ethiopian caravans.

BLAME RAID ON OFFICIALS

No general troop movement on the southern front was reported, however.

As Italian soldiers left Addis on the northern front for their drive southward in one of the most decisive thrusts of Italo-Ethiopian hostilities to date, many of the men left chafed messages on the walls of huts. "We will march ahead. No one but Mussolini can stop us."

Although the forward movement was scheduled to begin at dawn, the Italian dispatches said the advance began shortly after midnight.

The main body of troops started moving from Edaga Hamus, under General Santini, accompanied by another column including Italian blackshirts and regulars.

General Pirzio-Biroli also advanced with native Eritrean troops. The warriors of Gas Gussa, stirred

WANTS STRAITS MADE NEUTRAL

Embarrassing Demand From Italy Expected at Naval Conference in London

PARIS, Nov. 2 (P).—Italy will demand neutralization of the Straits of Gibraltar, Britain's strategic stronghold at the mouth of the Mediterranean, naval circles here said today.

The demand is expected at the London naval conference one month from today.

Diplomatic circles here said it was a "foregone conclusion" that Britain will be forced to refuse such a demand. They acknowledged, however, it would be "extremely embarrassing for London."

PURPOSE IN DEMAND
Premier Mussolini's purpose in the "bombshell," it was said, is to force Britain to declare "her intentions" in the Mediterranean, where most of her fleet is now massed.

It does not seem to offer to scrap the 35,000-ton battleships, placed in construction last year, as an evidence of good faith.

Britain, it was believed in naval circles here, has already scolded France on the latter's attitude if Italy makes the Gibraltar demand at the conference. What the French stand will be was not learned.

FIFTY MAROONED BY HEAVY SNOW

Fall in Idaho Blocks Highways—Driveling Food Supply Causes Anxiety

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho, Nov. 3 (P).—A heavy fall of snow in the Idaho Park country northeast of here isolated approximately fifty persons at the McGinnis ranch, officials of the Idaho Emergency Relief Administration were informed here today.

Drifting snow blocked highways and piled a blanket of from one to two and a half feet over the region. A dwindling food supply added to the concern of IERA officers and immediate efforts were made to obtain snowploughs from the State Highway Department at Pocatello, fifty miles to the south.

to fighting pitch, also slipped forward in the darkness. Auxiliary troops of "numerous" war-like tribesmen of the Danacalia region, with their wives and children, were reported allied with the Italian forces, with a marching ability of thirty miles daily. The air activity on the southern front, launched as the northern forces prepared for their move on Makale, resulted in the destruction of four trucks carrying rifles from British Somaliland, the correspondents reported. Caravan routes were bombed in many places in the Jijiga zone.

CONCESSIONS REPORTED

GENEVA, Nov. 2.—Definite concessions by Italy for peace were reported tonight after a League of Nations committee of fifty-two nations fixed November 18 as the date to begin a world-wide economic siege of the Fascist nation.

An Italian spokesman told the Associated Press the concessions for a possible peace in Africa were included in a statement given to Premier Pierre Laval, of France. Italy's views on how the war could be settled, it was said, were outlined in the statement. The informant said that, although Italy still insists upon her right for security and expansion, the statement contains definite concessions from Italy's original position.

APPEAL FOR FUNDS

An imposing list of spokesmen, including British, French, Belgian, Spanish and Argentine, had just finished addressing the League's desire to continue a search for a pathway to peace when an appeal arrived from the Ethiopian delegation for funds. "Ethiopia respectfully begs the members of the League," said the note, "to grant financial assistance to defend Ethiopia's peaceful existence against a State whose recourse to war and whose attitude is a manifest and undoubted menace to world peace."

The note further stated that, "Relying upon the guarantee of collective security embodied in the covenant (of the League), the Ethiopian Government has created neither armaments nor arms and ammunition factories."

GROUND FOR APPEAL

The appeal cited a draft convention approved by the League Assembly in 1920 providing for financial assistance for weak states which are victims of aggression.

GOOD FICTION BEING SOUGHT

H. Napier Moore, Maclean's Magazine Editor, Has Encouragement for Writers

Many budding authors were set back by Rex Beach's advice against pursuing a writing career, when he was in Vancouver several months ago.

These same writers may now return to their work with renewed hope, for H. Napier Moore, well-known editor of Maclean's Magazine and editorial director of Chatelaine Magazine, who is paying a short visit to Victoria, said, "never before has there been such a market for good fiction as there is now."

Asked what kind of stories his magazines were interested in, Mr. Moore replied: "Everything that is in the public mind." He referred to possibilities of basing real and vital stories on mining, seaports, and "new adventure" all through the North and West.

LIVING CHARACTERS

It matters little what period the story depicts, or what part of the world, or what circumstances, but the editor pointed out with emphasis, "It must contain real, living characters that 'do what you do, or like to do.'"

"Learn to write by rewriting," is Mr. Moore's advice to all who aspire to sell their manuscripts. Canadian magazines, he points out, must be of high quality in order to meet the competition from United States journals. Merely the fact that the writer of a story is a Canadian does not give his manuscript selling power.

Mr. Moore had high praise for Bruce Hutchinson's work, which is finding a ready market in various Canadian and American magazines. When Mr. Moore was in New York City recently he heard favorable comments about Mr. Hutchinson and his stories. They were liked in New York. This, Mr. Moore said, shows that a story with sufficient merit will sell anywhere, regardless of the country in which it is written.

WIDE EXPERIENCE

Not only to tell writers what is wanted by his magazines, but also to acquaint himself with local conditions, political and economic views, is the reason Mr. Moore gives for his periodic trips.

Victoria holds a special interest for the editor, as it was here that he was married. He came to Victoria in 1912, from England, where he had been working on a newspaper. Failing to secure a position on a local newspaper, he turned his hand to many jobs, including long-shoring and wiring of homes for electricity. Later he went to The News-Advertiser in Vancouver, which he left to go to the Great War. After the war he was engaged by several newspapers in the East, and ten years ago left a good position as a fiction writer to take over the editorship of Maclean's Magazine.

WILL CONTEST BY-ELECTION

Dr. F. W. Patterson, Vancouver, was chosen president at that meeting and given temporary extraordinary powers in the running of Conservative affairs.

RENEWED ACTION

With the Federal contest over, executive members expressed the view that Provincial action should be proceeded with at once.

The North Vancouver by-election won by the Conservatives in 1930 was the contest in which Jack Louet was elected over E. J. Bridgman, Liberal, after the seat had been vacant by the resignation of the sitting member, Hon. Ian MacKenzie, who was taken into the Federal Cabinet.

Between that time and the general election in 1933, a unitist Government was formed, and in the confused political situation existing the Conservative organization decided to remain out of the contest, though many individual Conservatives ran under other labels.

No Believer in Communist Plot

NANKING, China, Nov. 3 (AP).—A Foreign Office spokesman said tonight there was no basis for the police belief that a Communist plot was behind the attempt to assassinate Premier Wang Ching-wei.

The theory was widely held, however, that the gunman, Sun Ming Hsuan, who died today of bullet wounds inflicted by the Premier's bodyguard, acted because of his anti-Japanese feelings. The Premier considered a friendly toward Japan.

SIX NOW RUN FOR COUNCIL

Contest Is Assured by Entrance of Ald. P. R. Brown and Edward Williams

Announcement of Alderman P. R. Brown and Edward Williams as candidates for the City Council in the forthcoming civic election assured the contest of a contest at the polls this year.

Owing to the apathy shown by the general public toward the election, there was a growing feeling that the retiring members of the council might be returned by acclamation. However, Mr. Williams, who was runner-up for the fifth seat last year, and also a candidate in 1933, will make a third attempt.

Alderman Brown, who previously announced that he might retire from the council definitely this year, has been persuaded by many businessmen to continue his interest in the council.

Alderman Brown was elected to the council in 1925, and in that year also held a seat on the school board. With the exception of 1929 and 1930, he has been a member of the council ever since.

GUIDES POLICY

As chairman of the finance committee for many years, he has done much to guide the financial policy of the city, and has been given credit for keeping the city in the sound financial position it is today.

However, due to ill health he was compelled to retire from the chairmanship early last summer, but continued to carry on the duties of acting mayor.

Only one candidate has been announced for the school board, Alex Marshall, who sought a seat on the board last year, will run again this year. Trustees W. T. Straith and Colonel T. B. Monk have definitely announced they will not run again.

Trustees C. R. Bishop and Kenneth Ferguson have yet to make a decision. There are four seats on the school board to be filled this year.

Nomination day falls on Thursday, December 5, and election day on Thursday, December 12. In connection with the election, a plebiscite will be taken on the daylight saving question.

BECOMES CANADA'S GOVERNOR-GENERAL

maur, a graceful figure in soft blue, was the recipient of a beautiful bouquet of roses presented by Madame Taschereau, wife of the Premier of Quebec.

After a welcome from Prime Minister King and Premier Taschereau marked the proceedings, which were late owing to changed plans resulting from tardy arrival of Lord Tweedsmuir's ship.

His Excellency responded to both addresses, expressing his happiness at his approaching task in Canada and his hope that he might fulfill in full the purpose of his office.

REFLECTS IN FRENCH

He replied in French to an invitation from the Mayor of Quebec asking that he take up Summer residence at the ancient city.

The oath of office was administered by Mr. Justice Taschereau, pulse judge of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Flashing uniforms, bright evening dresses and brilliant decorations gave the ceremony a gay setting.

At its conclusion the Dominion was hoist at supper. The new Governor-General, Lady Tweedsmuir and members of their party then left for their special train.

They will be welcomed to Canada again at Ottawa on Monday.

Accompanying himself willingly and cheerfully to newspapermen who boarded the Duchess of Richmond early today at Father Point, Lord Tweedsmuir reflected and intimate knowledge of Canadian life and social activities as the ship proceeded up the St. Lawrence River.

He indicated familiarity with many aspects of Canadian life and Canadian thought and showed sympathy and understanding of Canadian problems.

He said he looked forward to the next five years of his service years which he trusted would be fruitful in the life of Canada. Lady Tweedsmuir joined him in this expression, recalling the accomplishments of Canadian women.

ALL STOP WHEN THE MASTER STOPS

SEATTLE, Nov. 2 (AP).—The University of Washington's 100 clock was stopped by the Montana earthquake at 10:41 a.m. yesterday. L. R. Kettering, chief electrician, said the quake vibrations caught the 100-pound pendulum of the university master clock in a reverse swing.

THE ENGLISH WAX SONAX FOR FLOORS & CARS

During 1934 the Hongkong Tramway Company showed a profit of $1,000,000, according to V. Walker, representative of the company, who sailed from here last evening aboard the S. Empress of Canada.

The company operates ninety-two double-decked trams, each with a capacity of sixty-two first and third-class passengers. Mr. Walker said that the modern street car is still the ideal transportation system for districts which demand three-minute or shorter service.

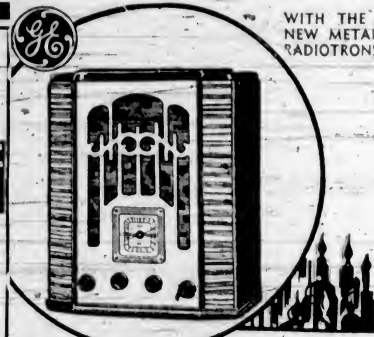

Following a survey of transportation systems in the British Isles and the United States, Mr. Walker is of the opinion Diesel engine buses will cost more to operate in the near future, as an increased number of units in operation cause the price of oil to rise.

Cariboo Pioneers Started History Of This Province

Louis Le Bourdais, Addressing B.C. Historical Society, Pays Tribute to Memory of Old-Timers Who Followed Gold Quest—An Intimate Story of the Cariboo Days

WITH the reminder that it was the old-time miners and the discovery of gold that had made this province what it is, and that the pioneers should not be forgotten, Louis Le Bourdais, of Quenel, B.C., simply, yet eloquently, concluded a fascinating talk he gave, last evening, before a capacity audience of the British Columbia Historical Society at the Provincial Library. Dr. J. S. Plaskett presided, and Dr. Tolmie and Miss Bowron moved the thanks of the audience.

"It was these old pioneers that gave not only close-up and made this country possible. Had it not been for the discovery of gold in the Cariboo, this province would never have been what it is. It was gold that attracted the attention of the Colonial Government to the West. The old-timers did a lot for this country, and we should not allow them to be forgotten; keep faith with them," he urged, as he completed his teeming canvas with the picture of Bill Brown, a typical pioneer.

STORY IN PICTURE. The story of "Some of Cariboo's Pioneers," was told by Mr. Le Bourdais with the assistance of a very fine collection of lantern slides, the majority made from photographs taken in the '60s, '70s and '80s, noted that an access of interest had recently followed the acquiring, by an English company, of four and a half miles on Williams Creek. The entire area in the immediate neighborhood had all been staked, although, did people but know it, there was a fifty-mile area of equally rich country not far distant.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD

Gold was first discovered in the Cariboo in 1852. But the gold rush proper did not begin until six years later, when between twenty and thirty thousand men, the majority from San Francisco, trekked in, the rush reaching its peak in 1862 on Williams Creek. A map prepared by Arthur Dickson, chief engineer of the Public Works Department, served to illustrate the route followed by the gold seekers as they went up from the Coast via Yale, Lillooet, Clinton and Soda Creek into Barkerville.

The first miners carried their equipment on their backs. Pictures illustrated this method of packing, also the pack horses, by means of which one packer cleaned up $10,000, which he spent in two years; various methods of river transportation, including rafts, a method used by some of the overlanders, who accompanied the first party on its journey from Eastern Canada by team; the one-wheeled barrow, an invention of Andrew Olson and his partner; the horse-and-mule caravans; built teams, camels, carts, traction engines and finally by rail and airplane.

The camel method, tried in 1862, was expected by the man who introduced it, to supercede all other modes of transportation, and might have been a success had it not frightened the horses, who did not like the camels' smell, off the roads, then "driven a train loaded with whisky" over the bluff. An idea of the profits to be made by packing was given in the statement that the rate charged for the packing of a single sack of flour was $160. The first cart introduced into the Cariboo came round the Horn, and was of such strong construction that it was still in use, and in sound condition.

MAY TAKE YEARS TO MODERNIZE ROADS

Continued from Page 1—concentration of political and commercial control on the Mainland, and that the proper interests of the Island would suffer. He was absolutely right. Ever since that day, when union, in which the people of Vancouver Island were not consulted, was proclaimed, the taxpayers here have been hewers of wood and drawers of water for Mainland interests. Capital assets of the Island have been exploited almost to the point of extinction in several directions, and the revenues that were produced in the process were not utilized to create new Island opportunities and activities.

Conference will soon be held at Victoria to discuss the problem.

Progress in remodeling the highway system of Vancouver Island is not carried out faster than the programme of this year, it will take as long to put the existing roads in good shape as it did for the Government to build the new road from the Island to the Mainland.

Vancouver Island needs more miles of highway. It must have them—and not forty years hence, but immediately. Otherwise it will not prosper. It can't afford to wait forty years for new roads. It can't afford to wait forty years for making the present highway system safe for modern transportation.

Vancouver Island must have a New Deal.

Victoria's Historical Trees

GOVERNOR DOUGLAS' CHERRY TREE
The old cherry tree shown above was planted on Elliot Street many years ago, by Sir James Douglas, when his home stood on the site. It grew from a slip brought from old Fort Vancouver, and although possibly the oldest fruit tree on Vancouver Island, still bears cherries of a variety known as Black Douglas.

Ottawa to discuss the amendment of the British North America Act. Mistakes as costly as those of 1860 may be perpetrated, and Vancouver Island in consequence may suffer further injury. British Columbia, as a whole, may also be retarded in her development. Action should be contemplated without consultation of the people.

The whole spirit of the Union—inconsiderate of the interests of Vancouver Island as it was—has been abandoned. At the time of the Union the Colonies were distinct and separate. As Sir James Douglas pointed out, the requirements of each were different, and to preserve something of the political balance between the two parts of the larger Colony representation was approximately equal. This condition existed until about forty years ago when the Mainland gradually started to gather to itself greater power. Today, instead of having a legislature balanced between the two old Colonies, the Mainland has thirty-eight seats and the Island only ten. Consequently legislation is regarded almost entirely from a Mainland viewpoint, and the Island obtains but scant consideration. Appropriations are allocated on the same basis, although per capita revenues are much greater from the Island. It is not just.

VISIBLE EFFECTS
The visible effects of this lifetime of discrimination are shown in public works, but the harm done in a dozen different ways is deeper and more devastating. The injuries that will be done unless there is a change in the outlook of governments in the future will be even more costly. Vancouver Island must have a definite plan of development, and a reasonable assurance that governments will adhere to that plan. Such a plan has never been produced. It should be formulated and made public without delay.

Government may recapture public confidence only by demonstrating that it can plan for the future as well as meet the problems of the moment. "Be fair in the press of the moment," the highway improvements being undertaken this year show that a better understanding exists of the need for modern roads on the Island than that of previous governments. Wider and safer road construction is being done than heretofore, but the total mileage of such improvement is entirely inadequate to the needs of the Island.

If progress in remodeling the highway system of Vancouver Island is not carried out faster than the programme of this year, it will take as long to put the existing roads in good shape as it did for the Government to build the new road from the Island to the Mainland.

Vancouver Island needs more miles of highway. It must have them—and not forty years hence, but immediately. Otherwise it will not prosper. It can't afford to wait forty years for new roads. It can't afford to wait forty years for making the present highway system safe for modern transportation.

RESORT ROAD IS IMPROVED

Approach to Thetis Lake Playground Being Widened For Motor Traffic

Work on the Thetis Lake Road, leading into the city's new playground for citizens and tourists, has advanced to the stage where actual surfacing work will be commenced shortly, a tour of the work with Alderman T. W. Hawkins disclosed yesterday morning.

The road, which only permitted one-way traffic, is being widened to an average width of fifteen feet, with some stretches of the road even wider where possible.

Several big fills have been necessary, while the men have had to build cribbing to provide support for the fills at some points. However, at the rate which the work is now progressing under the supervision of Alderman Hawkins, the actual widening and surfacing should be completed in about two or three weeks' time.

Thetis Lake, which is on the Goldstream watershed, is being developed as a natural park by the water board of the City Council. Fine fishing and hunting are provided at Thetis Lake, while in the Summer time it makes a splendid spot for swimming, boating, hiking and other Summer activities.

MAY BE DELAY TO ALLOW TEST

Vegetable Marketing Case Is Down for Trial Thursday, November 14

Trial of the action taken by the Vancouver Growers' Ltd., which was launched some time ago against the B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board, has been set for Vancouver on Thursday, November 14.

It is not certain, however, if the matter will come to trial on that date, in view of the fact that the Dominion Government has announced its intention to have tests made by way of stated cases before the Supreme Court of Canada of some of the acts that are held to be in doubt as to jurisdiction.

The act, which is being contested in the proceedings launched by the Vancouver Growers' Ltd., with Frank Higgins, K.C., acting as counsel, is one of the measures that is attacked and about which it is suggested a test will be made.

LORD TWEEDSMUIR IN OFFICE

Canada's fifty-third Governor-General, Lord Tweedsmuir, took office yesterday with his arrival at Quebec. Because there is something different about the new incumbent of Rideau Hall, there has been an air of expectancy and curiosity in this country following his appointment to the office. Before the announcement there were many people in the Dominion who knew little or nothing about him save as an author. He has, however, many other qualifications and had long been marked out as one destined for political preferment. His whole career in the British House of Commons seemed to be a training for elevation from participation in the hurly-burly of partisan strife. It was a strife in which he never allowed himself to become a pawn.

One marked feature of the new Governor-General is his imperturbability. There is a certain austerity in his manner which is set down to the character of his scholarship. He has been described as one of the most many-sided literary men living. In effect he has profound learning, something that brings in his train balanced judgment, and when he speaks it is in vivid and vigorous English and with a display of unfailing good taste. As in the case of all those of statesmanlike qualities, while he possesses many strong convictions he never allows these to warp his judgment. When at Oxford University he won all honors that he sought. In his parliamentary career he became known to the mass of the people in Great Britain more as a writer than anything else. The fact remains, however, that he was one of the most eloquent speakers in Parliament and showed there an unusual facility for accumulating his facts and polishing his presentation of them. No debate in which he participated ever found him losing command of the "grand manner." He never grew excited. With him the House of Commons was a place for judicial decisions based on the logic of fact.

Lord Tweedsmuir already enjoys an established place in his country's annals, one that is likely to be enhanced by his term as Governor-General of this country. It is symptomatic of the appreciation in which his talents are held that his historical novels should have been accepted in the way they were, both for their accuracy and the knowledge that they portray. They are repositories of learning. He has written lives of Cromwell, of Sir Walter Scott and of the Marquis of Montrose. All three are classics. He has written as well many lighter works. He has, indeed, been a prolific author, and his knowledge is so great that he can always write at top speed. He has engaged in the writing of three novels at the same time, carrying all that he wanted to say in his head and writing them when and where he could. Such a man is of undoubted literary versatility. Lord Tweedsmuir is one of the most brilliant Scots of modern times. He comes to Canada with a reputation of a character enjoyed by no former Governor-General and with a mind and experience that assure his success in the viceregal role.

ABSOLUTE WORTH

There is an injunction in St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians that they should "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called." In its broad sense the significance of this injunction is that the acts of life should be according to the eternal purpose, that there should be effort to attain the fellowship of the mystery that "from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God," and that access of confidence in faith should be sought by boldness whereby is attained appreciation of that love of Christ "which passeth knowledge." It is the word "worthy" which is of such profound significance. Its meaning is often variously interpreted according to human intelligence. There can be little doubt of what it emphasizes on the spiritual plane. Throughout the whole New Testament there is a liturgy of explanation of what worthiness is.

Dr. Richard Roberts once defined what he considered the supreme value of life and tried to divorce his mind in appraising them from what religion has to say. He summed up, in fact, what human wisdom has to say about these values. He spoke of those things which are valuable as means to an end, such as fire because of the many things it can do, but what he concentrated on and what is endorsed by all the wealth of experience, through the ages is ultimate values, what the Greek philosophers described as the good; the true and the beautiful. They are ends in themselves, not means to an end, for a good deed is its own justification, an act of courage or sacrifice is worth performing for its own sake, a beautiful thing is worth possessing or creating because it is beautiful and it needs no other reason for existing. Goodness, truth and beauty have an absolute worth in themselves without respect to anything else. They are, says Dr. Roberts, "holy and must not be thrown to the dogs; pearls that must not be tossed into the swine trough."

In "Looking Down the Years," Raymond Blathway asks what is it that appeals to the inner man, what lingers in his memory when all else has passed away? His answer is that it is the things of Nature? The voice of Nature. "I remember once," he said, "being caught in the lower foothills of the Himalayas, where they crowd themselves above and around Simla, by a gigantic thunderstorm—the most magnificent and the most terrific storm I have ever encountered. Nothing on earth could have surpassed the supremely gorgeous effect of the piling-up one upon another, of the huge clouds which, during the hour preceding the actual outburst, heralded the breaking of the monsoon that year. I never saw such exquisite effects of dazzling sunshine and purple black cloudscape as I witnessed that unforgettable afternoon. And then the first sublime crash of thunder as I took shelter within a yawning cavern in the mountainside: the long, long reverberations, rolling from peak to peak of those lonely, solemn mountains, stretching far away back into Tibet itself; and then the downpour of rain; the stupendous rapidly with which undreamed-of rivers of water formed themselves and poured torrentially down those storm-riven hills, and all the while earth shaking and quivering beneath the wonder and the majesty of the Voice of God. And then the breaking out of the sunshine once again; the joyous twittering of the birds and the chattering of the emancipated monkeys; the glittering of a myriad drops of water, where an hour before none had been seen; the exquisite freshness of the purified atmosphere."

The keynote of the foregoing is the acknowledgment that Nature is ordained by a supernatural agency, and that it is necessary to look from Nature up to Nature's God. It is only by so looking that the things of absolute worth in life are determined, and it is those things that are fundamental in Christianity and of and belonging to the eternal purpose. No one can endorse Christianity, no one can live a Christian life if he deny those things which remain mutually independent with the faith that Christianity proclaims. Those things are inherent in right conduct, they are habitually ethical and practical, and they are easily defined. The importance of a true creed rests upon the foundations of purity in life, in truthfulness and in absolute faith that through a right way of living all troubles will ultimately be removed and the actualities of Christian ethics justified in all their complexities.

The nobility of human nature lies in participation in the divine life. It is a question of sharing God's righteousness, inspired by a confident belief in mankind's power to make moral progress. There never has been in all human experience any doubt about the infinite worth of the human soul, but that worth can only be developed with complete compliance to the Will of God. That means that absolute worth is never determined by money that is possessed, by intellectual power, or by social qualities. It is a matter of man's attitude towards God, towards the things of the spiritual world, and what he is becoming in his progress in life. Thus man's worth lies in his possibilities, in his attitude towards what is good, what is true and what is beautiful. Those things, and they must be related to religion and the omnipotence of God in the scheme of creation, are what matter above all else. The absolute realities are matters for spiritual perception; they are the need of righteousness, the excellence of truth, the essentiality of goodness governing all actions. That is where worthiness lies; that is how through its exercise the supreme values of life are attained, how the law of moral conduct passes beyond words and actions into the inner sources of a man's life and governs his thoughts, his motives and his desires.

WEALTH OF THE RAND

In the Rand mining district if it is possible to penetrate another 2,500 feet in depth 200,000,000 more tons of ore would be made available, worth $280,000,000. This is the forecast made by Mr. Hans Pirov, the Government's mining engineer and South Africa's leading authority. Up to date it had been considered that 7,500 feet was the limit of penetration, but there has been such improvement in mine ventilation that 10,000 feet will be practicable.

The Rand has optimistic prospects, for as well as what Mr. Pirov forecasts the far western areas beyond the limits of the present Rand show indications of valuable gold fields. Boring operations have been carried out over a 100-mile strip stretching from the western limits of the present Rand into the Transvaal countryside. In this area valuable strikes have been made which indicate a long extension of the Rand reefs. Six new mines are to be opened and there are indications that it may be possible to extend the Rand to three times its present size. Evidently the greatest of gold-producing areas in for a new boom.

INFLUENCE

How much may be done, is done, by the brain and heart of one human being in contact with another? We are answerable for incalculable opportunities of good and evil in our daily intercourse with every soul with whom we have to deal; every meeting, every parting, every chance greeting, and every appointed encounter, are occasions open to us for which we are to account. To our children, our servants, our friends, our acquaintances—to each and all, every day, and all day long, we are distributing that which is best or worst in existence—influence, with every word, with every look, with every gesture, something is given or withheld of great importance, it may be, to the receiver, inestimable importance to the giver.—F. A. Kemble.

Note and Comment

By R. R. D.

Much to the state of life that none are happy but by the anticipation of change. The change itself is nothing. When we have made it, the next wish is to change again.—Johnson.

Doctors when in doubt after grave diagnosis sometimes recommend a change of circumstances for the patient, the nature of the change, of course, depending upon the circumstances of the patient. If there is nothing organically wrong with the patient except what unprofessional authorities call a natural grouch and professional authorities sometimes call a morbid state of mind, change of circumstances and scenes may have a miraculous effect, the patient may be "taken out of himself" and become almost a new man. If the treatment should prove absolutely effective, the grouch will vanish, and the patient who saw nothing but gloom in anything may hear music in the running brooks and see good in everything.

The supposititious case is applicable to the concrete case of Canada. The people of Canada were told before the general election that the country was in a desperate state and that the only possible remedy for this state of depression was a change of government. The people believed what they were told and voted for a change of government; they probably argued that a change could not do much harm and that it might do a lot of good. We were somewhat sceptical about the effect of the change, but are obliged to admit that already the change has done no harm and may do some good.

One change which has been accomplished already is a complete revolution in the state of mind of the newspapers which opposed the Bennett Government. The Liberal newspapers were as gloomy before the election as the late gloomy Gums in his gloomiest days. They shed tears every morning and evening as copiously as Job Trotter, the flow of whose "waterworks" was a matter of astonishment to Sam Weller, surely the most imperturbable of all artistic creations. The opponents of the Government then could see no good in anything. The atmosphere in which they lived and moved and had their being was as insupportable as a single ray of sunshine as that of Hades.

Since Bennett went out and King came in the change has been as miraculous as that effected on the morning of the day when the sun was first set in his place in the heavens. Every morning and evening now the news published in the papers emits a brighter ray. The prospect everywhere is pleasing. There is sweet music in the running brooks of commerce and good in every item printed. The trade of Canada, with Great Britain which a week or two ago was threatened by perilous Ottawa Agreements has assumed a new aspect. All the Liberal commentators are excitedly directing attention to the fact that Canadian bacon has swept the boards in an English exhibition in competition with the celebrated Danish product and that Canadian exports of bacon to Britain have increased enormously during the past year.

Even The Winnipeg Free Press, which has persistently maintained that nothing good ever could come to Canada except under a policy of free trade, and which has consistently pointed the finger of scorn at the Ottawa Agreements, has pointed a finger of hope and glory at what has been brought about by the "lowly Canadian hog." Our prairie contemporary is even pointing out with assurance that if the Canadian farmers understand their business and meet the British demands for bacon with a constant supply, this industry may become the head of the agricultural corner now that so many other countries have been stimulating the cultivation of wheat by what amounts to hothouse measures.

There is, of course, nothing new in all this. The cultivation of the British markets for many kinds of Canadian products was going on all the time the Bennett Government was in power. Our British Columbia lumber industries have substantial reasons for their knowledge of that truth. Mr. King admitted his knowledge of it when he said that if it had not been for the progress of a British election campaign he would have given his attention first to negotiations for the enlargement and improvement of Imperial preferential trade. But it would not have been good party tactics to have admitted this while the author of the Imperial preferential trade policy was in power. The change of government, of course, has nothing whatever to do with the improved and improving prospects of Canada from a material point of view. The King Government has done nothing to bring about any change except a change in the temperamental attitude of the Liberal newspapers. It has not had the time to change the politics of the former Government and to initiate policies of its own. The improvement in the business conditions began during the term of the late Government. Whether that will continue under the direction of the new Prime Minister depends more upon what the leader refrains from doing than upon what he does.

Do You Know That

According to the official contracts of the National and International Hockey League, players are required to place a deposit of thirty dollars each with the club owners to cover the cost of uniforms. The money is refunded at the end of each season. Amos Rusie, the old-time New York Giant pitcher, is working in Seattle—Mel Ott, Giant's outfielder, is a veteran at twenty-six. He has been with the New York club for ten years. Moose Johnson, former Victoria hockey star, who was famous with his sweeping hook checks, is still breaking on the trains in Portland.

Mildred "Babe" Didrikson, the great girl athlete, is credited with smacking a golf ball 385 yards. She performed this trick in Tacoma this Summer—Gertrude Ederle, U.S. swim star, was the first woman to swim the English Channel. She held the record for some time—Eddie Shore, Dick Irwin and Lionel Conacher, noted hockey players, are going in for politics in a strong way. No doubt they are looking into the future.

A Good System

As the civic election approaches one is reminded of the fact that Victoria possesses probably the most efficient polling system in Canada. Revised by M. F. Hunter, city clerk and returning officer, the system has received recognition throughout Canada, either by new stories in various papers, or by editorial comment. Mr. Hunter's system makes it possible to know the final results of an election by 9:30 o'clock. That was the record last year with a plurality of candidates such has seldom been in a civic election. In years gone by it used to take midnight and even dawn to get the final results. To one o'clock in the morning to ascertain the final count—P.C.R.

The Nasty Old Thing

One freezing afternoon last week two young matrons went to enter a Fort Street shop, with their infants ensconced in perambulators, were deterred outside by a hatted woman with a dial like Aunt Sammy of the comic strip. The elderly woman angrily informed them that the sidewalk outside was the place for "kids." When the young women recovered from their consternation, the air of the second chambermaid's house, household requirements, fuel, heaters, stoves, and the wherewithal to repair the latter, which in many cases have reached the stage where repairs are absolutely necessary.

SCANDINAVIANS
 Sir—Let me put in a few lines of further information to some of the people in the city of Victoria about the Scandinavians in regard to where they did receive their education or culture in the first place.

Now, according to the historic information I have got from the Scandinavian literature, the Scandinavians did receive most of their education or culture from the British and the Germans and the Americans, and besides that they have received their education or culture from the Dutch. But in the first place the Scandinavians did receive their education of culture from the British and the Germans and later, in this century, they have received their education or culture from the Americans besides what they have received from the British and the Germans.

TAX SALES
 Sir—The opinion you express in your editorial of the 31st ult., in respect of raising the tax rate, which possible revision of more property to the city through the delinquent tax route, is decidedly well taken.

You mention the question of reverted lands as being one of growing concern to the municipality. It has been growing so long that it is almost a part of the city's life. It still allowed to continue, will soon prove to be a veritable "overgrown" monster of destruction.

The tax amount does not grow less, however, because the city is now poorer by the simple expedient of raising the tax rate, which must necessarily fall upon the remaining property owners.

It seems to me the trouble mainly lies in the migration of so many of our citizens to the adjoining municipalities because there is a more modern class of house being built and under the mistaken idea that it is cheaper to live out there. True, the taxes are lower, but the

LORD SNOWDEN AND THE ELECTION

Sir—Your instructive comments on the election in the Old Country make very good reading and are very interesting to us, Old Country people, and especially so your remarks in today's Colonist about Lord Snowden and the part he is playing.

May I point out, however, what seems to have escaped your notice, viz., that by usage, custom and by law a member of the House of Lords is not allowed to make any part, by word, act, or deed, in the election of a member to the House of Commons. However, up to the time the present House of Commons was dissolved, Lord Snowden had the right to talk, and he made the most of his opportunity. On behalf of the very numerous Old Country residents in and around Victoria, allow me to thank you for the good reports you are giving us. Please keep it up.

I have followed the career of Philip Lord Snowden, ever since, as a boy, he used to gather together the young people, and the older ones who choose to come, in the Yorkshire country village, and heard them from the steps of the village pump on the current events of the day. With all his faults, he has proved himself to be a great statesman, and of his work as Foreign Secretary and Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Labor Government history will tell.

I think, without doubt, the result of the election will be that Stanley Baldwin and the National Government will be again returned to watch over and safeguard British interests in all parts of the world. The British workman and elector, unlike we here in Canada, does not believe in "swapping horses when crossing the stream."

AN APPEAL

Sir—May I, through your paper, make a general appeal to the people of Victoria to support the new Public Welfare and Relief Department, the entrance to which is 1322 Broad Street. Saving in these by no means offsets the extra general cost of living.

No person may successfully argue against the fact that the closer to the city centre one can comfortably reside—the lower the cost, and the more the free services tending to healthful conditions of living.

I pass out the following suggestion for what it may be worth, i.e., it would pay the property owners to get busy remodeling inside and out all the vacant houses in the city. The cost of such improvement would be fractional in comparison with the all-round benefits that cannot fail to result, and most of the houses, being well built originally, when again put in good repair and brought up to date, will easily hold their own with any of the newly-built, in or out of the city.

IMPERIAL VETERANS

Sir—Please be good enough to permit the use of your columns for the following letter to ex-Imperial soldiers, and oblige.

For the purpose of organizing a British Columbia Provincial command of the Imperial Veterans Corps (in Canada), with headquarters in Toronto and with other Provincial Commands in the Eastern provinces, all ex-Imperial of the Great War are requested to register either personally or by letter at suite 10, 423 Hamilton Street, Vancouver, B.C.

The Hyndman Commission's report will be up for action before the Dominion Government shortly, and legislation will be enacted which will have a bearing on the future welfare of ex-Imperials, therefore western organization is necessary in order that the position of ex-Imperials in the West should receive full representation, and the efforts of the Eastern commands and other friendly organizations be augmented and the present status at least be maintained and improved if at all possible.

Warring Milk Groups in Vancouver Told to Agree
Or Fight it Out Alone

Hon. K. C. MacDonald returned to the city yesterday, after warning disputing milk groups in the Fraser Valley bluntly that they must get together on some marketing scheme, or be content to fight out their differences without Government help or legislative sympathy.

"As did his predecessors, each in turn, Dr. MacDonald said he had arrived at the conclusion that the existence of a co-operative marketing statute had not of itself brought peace.

Speaking to Fraser Valley Boards of Trade at Chilliwack, last week, he said that if producers could not agree, neither the Government nor the Legislature could do anything for them.

WILL AWAIT RESULT

Dr. MacDonald said the Province would wait now to see what final course disputing milk groups would take, before deciding on any provincial action.

Meanwhile, the fate of Federal marketing legislation itself is at stake, with major and minor court tests down for early reference. In the Federal law are the major powers of pooling and levying upon which most provincial marketing schemes depend, in a subsidiary sense.

B.C. SALT FISH SHOWING GAINS

Cash Sales at Better Prices
Are Reported in First Half of Season

With 10,000 tons of salt herring marketed out of a quota of 23,000 tons set for the year, West Coast saltery plants are reporting better business this year, West Coast saltery plants are reporting better business this year, provincial fishery officials said yesterday.

Last year the influence of a Chinese boycott against a herring catch, handled in part by Japanese, and lack of other demand in the Orient market, contributed to disturbed marketing conditions, in which consignments sales brought poor returns to the producers.

PRICES IMPROVE

This year consignment sales have been abandoned, and salt fish is moving forward regularly out of the present season's output at firmer prices, with settlement on a cash basis.

Some of the credit is given, by provincial officials, to the British Columbia Salt Fish Marketing Board for improvement in marketing arrangements this year. It is not disputed, however, that the basic improvement has come in the state of the export market itself.

NOT GENERAL

The improvement has not been general. With one of the largest salmon packs in recent years, British Columbia exporters are faced with a number of complications in the marketing of the product not previously anticipated.

Salmon account for three-quarters of the entire value of the fishery output of the province, and satisfactory disposal of the pack means much to the industry as a whole.

SAYS BUSINESS SHOWS UPTREND

Montreal and Vancouver
Businessmen Speak of Steady Improvement

"There has been a gradual but steady improvement in business in Eastern Canada in the last few months, and while the movement is slight I think we can say we are on the way towards better times," Lionel P. Walsh, president of the Dominion Tar & Chemical and the Canada Creosote Company, Montreal, said yesterday, in an interview at the Empress Hotel.

Mr. Walsh was accompanied to the city by Loren L. Brown, managing director of the Canada Creosote Company, Montreal; Archie R. Leitch, president of the Timber Preservers, Ltd., Vancouver, and George H. Herrmann, president of the Vancouver-Creosote Company, on what he described as a business trip with vacation possibilities.

BUSINESS VISIT

No extension of plant or equipment was contemplated in British Columbia by the firms he represented, Mr. Walsh said. Ramifications of business conducted with the Orient accounted in part for the Western tour of the party at this time.

Mr. Brown, up until a year ago identified with British Columbia lumber trade in Britain, returns to the city as an executive member of Canada Creosote Company, Montreal. He spoke briefly of the altered picture in Britain now in respect to Soviet timber imports, and predicted that Canada would benefit from ultimate elimination of the tariff clause in import contracts with Russian shippers.

Due to price, distance, and other factors there would be a limit to the profitable business British Columbia could expect with Britain, Mr. Brown added, referring again to lumber. Empire preferences, he concluded, had worked to the advantage of this province, and current exports were being well maintained.

Business conferences in the morning, golf in the afternoon, and return to the Mainland last evening completed the itinerary of the party here.

TO TAKE SIMILAR WORK IN ONTARIO

Rev. E. R. McLean, Religious Secretary in B.C., is Promoted to Eastern Post

Well known in this city and on Vancouver Island as a provincial leader in religious education, Rev. E. R. McLean, B.A., B.D., will leave the Coast about December 1, to take up a similar position in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. McLean has been for seven years general secretary of the Religious Education Council of British Columbia, a body widely representative of the Christian churches British Columbia, with headquarters of the province. His catholicity of spirit, lack of efficiency and religious earnestness have made him one of the major forces in the advancement of Christian education among the young. He has raised this province to a foremost place in this field, and his transfer to Ontario is a promotion in opportunity for service.

IN WESTERN CANADA

A graduate of Toronto University, and receiving his B.D. degree from Union Seminary, New York City, Mr. McLean was ordained by the Presbytery of Toronto for special field work in Western Canada where he organized one hundred and thirty-eight Sunday schools in one year.

In 1918 he was called to be field secretary for the Presbyterian Board of Sabbath Schools for Alberta and representative of the Christian churches British Columbia, with headquarters at Vancouver. From 1923, Mr. McLean's activities were confined to British Columbia. He was the first to promote vacation schools in the pioneer areas; he wrote the first constitution of the Boys' Parliament and organized the first leaders' training camp in British Columbia. A very large circle of friends wish him success in his larger field of service.

VICTORIA HOMES RECONSTRUCTION

It is proposed to incorporate a company, the object being the purchase and reconstruction, or reconstruction only, of homes in Victoria City, the stock in which company shall be sold at a par value of $100 per share.

The sponsors of this company confidently hope there will be no dearth in the demand for shares, relying upon property owners, other investors, home seekers and wage earners being prompt in their generous response.

HERE IS THE REASONING:

Kindly peruse the "For Rent" columns in our daily papers to be convinced there are hundreds of vacant houses, and the list is ever increasing. Vacant houses quickly become dilapidated, the owner becomes disgusted and refuses or is unable to pay the taxes, the property then reverts to the city.

Every reversion of a property to the city increases the burden of taxation borne by the remaining property owners. Thus, this ever-increasing menace is of vital importance to all of us who have the welfare and growth of the city at heart.

HERE ARE TWO MAIN CAUSES FOR THIS DEPLORABLE STATE OF AFFAIRS:

The steady exodus of citizens to the outlying municipalities, because there is a more modern class of home being built there, and because they are "saving" money through lower taxation.

The object of this company readily counteracts the first cause as to modern homes; and as for the second cause, we propose to satisfactorily prove that it actually costs "double" to live in the outlying municipalities; and further, the facilities for health, religion, schooling, sickness, fire and police protection are easily "more than double" those of the outlying municipalities.

Any person should now realize that it is distinctly advantageous to comfortably dwell as near the civic centre as possible.

A substantially-built home reconstructed and located to your liking will cost less in purchase and yearly general upkeep than will one of new construction.

The demand for homes is steadily increasing.

The shareholders see what they are buying and watch their money earning; thus home investment is made safer and more profitable than that of alien securities. The shareholders elect a competent Advisory Board, and their money is deposited in escrow in the company bank account to be withdrawn only upon authority of said board.

Positively no watered stock, as every profit-participating share has been paid for in cash, and the total charges of the management are based solely on a percentage of the profits voted them by the shareholders.

You must be prompt in your generous response.

FANTASY IS BIG SUCCESS

"The Wizard of Oz" Proves Fascinating Production in Hands of Puppets

Fantastic characters in the illustrated plates of the children's book "The Wizard of Oz" stepped out of the story book and lived their experiences over again at the puppet show produced by the Cornish Players in the Empire Theatre yesterday afternoon and evening.

Hundreds of persons were turned away from both performances, while many hundreds more witnessed one of the most fascinating and novel entertainments to be presented in this city for many years.

"The Wizard of Oz" is a production by Eileen Van Volkenburg, under the direction of Irene Phillips, under the sponsorship of the Commodore Broughton Chapter, I.O.D.E. The production is adapted from A. Frank Baum's story by W. A. Kinnear. It is staged by thirty-five musical marionettes in eleven artistic scenes that make this fantasy one of the most absorbing in literature for children and adults.

INTEREST SUSTAINED

From the moment that Dorothy, chief character in the tale, is whisked to the land of the Munchkins until the time that she is delivered from her strange experiences after fulfilling several exciting and dangerous commissions, there is no lack of interest.

To watch the puppets perform is like reading a fairy tale and then watching the fanciful figures of some highly-colored illustration plate come to life and enact the story.

The voices of the marionettes were quite audible, so that the story was easy to follow, although the accompanying pantomime would have told the story in any event.

Not only was Dorothy quite realistic, but her dog provided many laughs and at times appeared quite lifelike. Dorothy's journey to the Emerald City and the gathering about her of the Scarecrow, the Tin Woodsman and the Lion provided exciting, laughable, musical and terpsichorean moments that will live for a long time in the memory of those who saw this unusual performance.

During the intermission, three copies of "The Wizard of Oz" were distributed to the holders of lucky numbers.

Prior to the rise of the curtain, also during the intermission, the Lyric Trio, comprising Miss Margaret Pringle, pianist; John Pimm, violinist, and Herbert Bohn, cellist, played several delightful numbers.

The scenery for the show was designed by Mildred Sater, and the musical score and lyrics composed by Edward Chamberlain. Charles Trainor was in charge of the lighting, which played an important part in the production, while Jesse Curtis was the accompanist.

After seeing "The Wizard of Oz" yesterday, one no longer wonders why this production has played before crowded theatre audiences in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

GYMANFA GANU

Please notice correction with regard to report of monthly meeting of the Welsh Society, held Friday, A. Nunn, Bert Marchant and George Oard, A return match will be played later in the year.

The benevolent old gentleman had once been a good cricketer, and even now took a lively interest in the game. Passing along one of the streets of almsland one day and finding a game in progress, he could not resist standing and watching it.

Soon he became aware of certain faults in the umpire's ruling, and he questioned that official about the matter.

"I see," he said, "that your batsman has been bowled, caught and stumped, but does not go out. Why is that?"

"Oh, m." was the umpire's reply. "He stays in as long as 'e likes!"

Why is that? queried the old gentleman again. "Is he the owner of the bat, or is he a bully?"

"Neither, sir," said the urchin. "But 'is father is the bobby."

He came out of Charing Cross Station and spent the next hour or two wandering aimlessly up and down the Strand—Evening Paper.

HISTORIC TITLE

LONDON, Nov. 2 (AP).—Preparations for the wedding Wednesday of the Duke of Gloucester and Lady Alice Montagu-Douglas-Scott have brought many persons for the first time, how to pronounce the historic title, "Buccleuch." The Duke of Buccleuch is Lady Alice's brother. The correct way to pronounce the title, public speakers have demonstrated, is to say "Buccleuch," with the accent on the "clou."

"What is Mea Bill so gloomy about today?" said the traveling salesman.

"Family fortune," said Cactus Joe. "His old folks left him a marked deck of cards to make a living with. He's wondering whether he'll have to pay an inheritance tax."

Miss Bryant Is Bride of Mr. F. H. Wells

A pretty wedding was solemnized yesterday at St. Alban's Church, Rev. F. W. Weaver officiating, when Vera, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Bryant, was united in marriage to Mr. Frederick Hamilton Wells, second son of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Wells, Cedar Hill.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, entered the church to the strains of "The Bridal Chorus" from "Lohengrin," played by Mrs. Swan. The church had been beautifully decorated by Miss Mary Alice Thompson, Mrs. H. Hatcher and Mrs. E. Roskelley and was thronged with friends of the bride and groom.

The bride's lovely gown was of white organza, made with soft folds and a cape to match, and her veil or embroidered net was held to her head with a wreath of orange blossoms, falling in soft folds to the hem of her dress. Long silk mittens and "white shoes" completed her toilette, and she carried a bouquet of white and pale pink carnations. Her only ornament was a gold pendant and chain, she gift of the bridegroom.

THE ATTENDANTS
Miss Mary Alice Thompson was maid of honor, wearing a pale pink lace dress and hat to match and carrying a sheaf of yellow snapdragons. The matron of honor was Mrs. W. Hatcher, sister of the bride, wearing a pale green organza dress with ruffled skirt and cape, her hair trimmed with pink, and the silk mittens frilled at the cuffs. Her bouquet was of pale pink snapdragons. Miss Dorothy Tubbs was a charming little flower girl in a pale green silk frock and hat to match and she carried a Colonial bouquet.

Mr. Bill Cuzner was best man and the ushers were Messrs. W. Hatcher and H. Wells.

RECEPTION HELD
After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where Mrs. A. V. Bryant and Mrs. F. H. Wells received the guests. Mrs. Bryant wore a becoming georgette and lace ensemble and hat to match, with a soft lace veil, and Mrs. Wells wore a blue georgette dress and panne velvet wrap and velvet hat. Both wore corsage bouquets.

The house was beautifully decorated for the occasion in a color scheme of pink and white. The bride and groom stood beneath an arch of flowers and lucky charms to receive their friends. The toast to the bride was proposed by Mr. Thompson, and the bride cut the two-tier cake, which had been made by her mother. The table decorations had been arranged by Mrs. F. Hatcher, Sr., and comprised pink and white snapdragons and trailing fern.

After the reception, the bride and groom left for their wedding trip, the bride wearing a brown silk dress trimmed with gold buttons and fur and a coat of tree bark trimmed with a lapin collar, and a brown fur felt hat and veil. Mr. and Mrs. Wells will make their home in the Scott Apartments. The out-of-town guests included Mrs. and Mrs. Baynton, of Vancouver, and Mr. and Mrs. Laird, of Cumberland.

Anniversary of W.M.S. of First United Marked

A most successful party to celebrate the tenth anniversary of union was given on Friday evening by the Senior Auxiliary of the Women's Missionary Society of First United Church to the affiliated groups, at which there was a very large and happy gathering.

Mrs. A. Chisholm, the president, extended greetings and a warm welcome to all present. She introduced the Mission Band representative of Mrs. Naysmith and Miss Marjorie Brown, conducted a candle-lighting ceremony, the candles being placed one by one around a huge birthday cake which occupied the center of the table. Under the leadership of Miss L. McCall, a pageant was given in which members of the C.G.I.T. representing missionaries in several fields, showed how they were helping to bring the Kingdom of God on earth. Three of the Glenora presented sketches, introduced by their leader, Miss Gladys Schreder. Miss Jean Munro played a Bible woman in Trinidad; Miss Edna Ramsdell a teacher in Japan, and Miss Jean Wilson, Dr. Victoria Chung, at Marion Barclay Hospital, Kowloon, China.

Miss Nelson, president of the Golden Link Auxiliary, introduced representatives of that group, who portrayed the march of time since 1925 in the various branches of the work while Mrs. William Wright and Miss O. Campbell, accompanied by Miss O. Campbell, sang a beautiful duet, "The Lord Is My Shepherd." Mrs. W. G. Wilson, branch president, expressed much pleasure and appreciation in the efforts put forth by the various groups and briefly outlined the growth of each, inspiring one and all to greater service.

Under the convener'ship of Mrs. W. H. Wright, refreshments were served from a beautifully decorated table centered with the illuminated birthday cake, Mrs. W. O. Wilson and Mrs. R. W. Mayhew presiding.

Gladys Glad On Beauty

Despite the fact that most of us are trying to keep him away from the door, I'm convinced that if the wolf were to sneak into granny's cottage today, it would be he and not Red Riding Hood, who would cry, "Oh, granny! What big eyes you have!" For nowadays granny is just as well-versed in all the tricks of facial embellishment as her smart, sophisticated granddaughter. And goodness knows, that's certainly well-versed.

However, there are a couple of eye-enlarging tricks that even smart little granddaughters might not know, and these tricks, well worth knowing at the time of the application of her mascara that a woman demonstrates her skill. Most women use mascara merely to darken their lashes, but it can also help to make the eyes appear larger, if correctly applied. In the first place, it should be brushed mostly on the tips of the lashes. For the lash tips, due to their fineness, are usually the lightest, and are often very unnoticeable. If the tips are darkened so that, while not noticeably mascaraed, they are plainly obvious, they will give a most charming fringed effect to the eyes.

REAL TRICK

The real trick in making the eyes appear longer and the lashes fuller through the use of mascara, however, lies in applying the mascara most heavily on the lashes at the corner of each eye. If you properly stress the lashes at the outer corner of each of your eyes, you'll find that it will tend to magnify the apparent size of your orbs, and give an illusion of greater depth to your eyes.

Eye shadow cream can also be used to give the eyes an appearance of greater size and width. The eye shadow cream should not be applied in a row strip just above the eye. It should be applied at the lower edge of the lid, allowing no margin between it and the lashes. In addition, it should be blended, lightly.

ANOTHER GRANDDAUGHTER

LONDON, Nov. 2 (P)—Rt. Hon. Ramsay MacDonald, Lord President of the Council, today became a grandfather for the second time, when Mrs. MacKinnon, his daughter, gave birth to a daughter, in Leeds.

BUDAPEST, Nov. 2 (P)—Bobby Kiefer, of the Chicago Athletic Club, today lowered the international mark for the 400-metre backstroke when he covered the distance in 5:22.6. The listed world record of 5:30.4 was made by M. Kiyokawa, of Japan, two years ago.

"THIS TOOTHPICK TEST SHOWED ME HOW TO KEEP MY Breath sweet... Teeth white!"

TAKE a toothpick or some unsterilized dental floss. Clean between your teeth. Does it reveal small food deposits? Smell it. If it has an unpleasant odour, it means that your teeth are improperly cleaned. These food deposits are a common cause of bad breath and tooth decay, dentists say. But cleaning your teeth the Colgate way, with Colgate's Dental Cream eliminates this condition.

CLEAN YOUR TEETH THE COLGATE WAY

Morning and night with Colgate's Dental Cream brush thoroughly the upper teeth from gums down, lower teeth from gums up. Brush the cutting edge of your teeth with a circular motion. Then rinse your mouth. After that put a bit of Colgate's on your tongue and take another sip of water. Gargle well back in the throat, then flush the water through your teeth. Rinse again with clear water. That's all. Colgate's penetrating foam gets into all crevices and between the teeth even where the toothbrush cannot reach. It dissolves odour breeding food deposits and washes them away. Leaves the mouth and all tooth surfaces thoroughly clean.

YOU GET THESE COLGATE RESULTS

Your teeth are thoroughly clean. The polishing ingredient in Colgate's, the same one your dentist uses, keeps your teeth white and sparkling. Colgate's delicious peppermint flavor leaves your mouth refreshed and your breath fragrant. And brushing your teeth the Colgate way stimulates the gums.

For those who prefer it, Colgate's Dental Powder will give the same Colgate results. Large tin 20¢.

Little Stories for Bedtime

Farewells and Welcomes.

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

All through the long Summer Peter watched his feathered friends and learned things in regard to their ways and habits. As he saw them keeping the trees of the Old Orchard free of insect pests, picking up countless seeds of weeds everywhere and helping Farmer Brown in his garden, he began to understand something of the wonderful part these feathered people have in keeping God's Great World beautiful and worth living in.

He had many a hearty laugh as he watched the bird babies learn to fly and to find their own food. All about him all Summer long they were going to school, learning how to watch out for danger, how to use their eyes and ears and all the things a bird must know who would live to grow up.

September came and some of Peter's friends made him good-bye.

As the days grew shorter and Fall drew near Peter discovered that his feathered friends were gathering in flocks and roosting here and there. It was one of the first signs that Summer was nearly over, and it gave him just a little feeling of sadness. He heard few songs, for the singing season was over. Also he discovered that many of the hitherto most beautifully dressed of his feathered friends had changed their finery for sober traveling suits in preparation for the long journey far south where they would spend the Winter. The fact is, he actually failed to recognize some of them at first.

September came and some of Peter's friends made him good-bye. They were starting on the long journey, planning to take it in easy stages for the most part. Each day saw some fly away. As Peter thought of the dangers before them, he wondered rather wistfully if he would ever see them again. But some there were who lingered even after Jack Frost's first visit. Welcome and Mrs. Robin, Winsome and Mrs. Bluebird, Little and Hairy the Woodpeckers and his wife were among these. But by and bye even they were forced to leave.

Sad indeed and lonely would these days have been for Peter had it not been that with the departure of the friends he had spent so many happy hours with was the arrival of certain other friends from the Far North, where they had their Summer homes. Some of these stopped for a few days only. Others came to stay, and Peter was kept busy looking for and welcoming them. A few old friends of the Summer would stay all Winter. Sammy Jay was one. Downy and Hairy the Woodpeckers were others. And one there was whom Peter loved dearly. It was Tommy Tit the Chickadee.

Referee Puts Halt To Senior Fixture And Navy Wins 3-0

Aubrey Walls Calls Off Play Near Finish When Sailors and Soldiers Talk Too Much—Garrison Pressing at Time—Work Point "B" Squad in 9-0 Triumph

Navy and Garrison senior rugger proved themselves real fighters but not diplomats, when they met yesterday afternoon at Admirals Road grounds, and, with the score standing 3-0 in favor of the sailors, Referee Aubrey Walls called the game with only five minutes before the finish.

"Too much talking," he explained as he showed the two teams to the showers. The score, 3-0, for the Navy, stands as far as Walls is concerned, but what the Rugby Union might do is another matter, he stated.

Garrison's senior "B" squad fought its way through a Navy fifteen at the barracks to score a victory of 9-0. Three tries netted the points for the Army rugger, who were continually on the ball.

TEAMS TOO EAGER
In the senior encounter, both teams were too eager throughout the game to play good Rugby, and both halves were marked with much whistle blowing. Every other time the whistle sounded it resulted in the referee awarding a free kick to either side for multiple infractions of the rules.

Within the first five minutes of play, speedy Hibbert made two brilliant runs down the right wing for the Navy, and scored on the second. Barker failed to hoist the ball between the posts.

Although the Army had the ball next to the sailors' line on several occasions they lacked the final punch to carry it across. The Garrison pack worked hard but had difficulty in getting the ball out of the scrum and when they managed to gain possession, the ball was often thrown away in the backfield by poor passes.

The Navy were little better and they, as well as the Garrison, were repeatedly penalized for "feet up in the scrum" flared on both sides and hands turned into fists as arms flailed on occasions.

Navy players were inclined to play solo rather than a combination game, while the Army backs appeared to have little faith in each other and did much aimless kicking in preference to passing.

Teams follow:
Navy—Robinson, Putnam, Smith, Arnold, Hibbert, Freeman, Stage, Montgomery, Sweetman, McCrae, Barker, Corbin, Caldwell, Hall and Sinclair.

Garrison—Smale, Buxton, Shone, Snow, Scott, Martin, Loveless, Hall, Wharton, Easick, Lee, Watson, Patterson, Rowton and Featherstone.

SENIOR "B"
The Garrison senior "B" boys gained their first try in the first half when S. Pocock caught a pass from Polinsky and raced twenty-five yards. Fred Pocock, in the second half, received the ball from Anderson and managed to cross the line. Green, a newcomer to the squad, more than proved his worth, and scored the third try after picking up the ball on a forward rush. Thomas handled the whistle.

The teams follow:
Garrison—S. J. Pocock, Clark, McGee, Polinsky, Green, Sugden, Mainprize, Johnson, Croft, Hipp, Anderson, Horn, Bath, Hatch and Fred Pocock.

Ready for Active Season

Tommy Cook, of Chicago's Black Hawk Team, Getting in Trim for an Active Season of Hockey.

Squads Preparing For Annual Match At Macdonald Park

There will be "war" at Macdonald Park, on Remembrance Day. For on that day Victoria's classic Rugby game, between the Fifth Brigade and the Canadian Scottish, will be played for the fifth consecutive year.

With the game will be all the trimmings of such an encounter, with bands and notables present. Hon. J. W. Fordham Johnson, Lieutenant-Governor, donor of the trophy for which the two squads battle for annually, will be present at the game. T. D. Pattullo, Prime Minister, Mayor David Leeming, Commander G. C. Jones, Brigadier D. J. MacDonald, Colonel D. R. Sargent, Regimental Commander.

Delinquents from both the military units here will parade to the park in uniform, accompanied by the respective bands of the two groups. The Fifth Brigade Brass Band and the Scottish Pipe Band will play at halftime, with the latter also piping the Canadian Scottish team onto the field.

The two units will have lunch at the Armories, after the Remembrance Day services, and will proceed from the Armories to the park. In five short years the annual "army" game has become a tradition. On that day the competitive spirit of both these units flares to fever pitch and usually some smart Rugby is staged for the fans.

FIFTH WINNERS
In 1931, when the first game was played, the two teams played to a draw, but since that time the "Fighting Fifth" have smashed through to win over the Canadian Scottish Regiment.

This year the Scots have a powerful team lined up and although they dropped the first encounter to Navy, 10-3, they will be fighting to stop the winning streak of the Fifth. Meantime, Coach Bob Travis, of the Scots, and his assistant, Bobby Tye, former Victoria rep player, are working their men through hard practices and expect to trim the Gunners in the encounter.

However, Coach Charlie Morton has secured a strong squad for the Fifth this year and the team has won two straight since the league opened. The Fifth, too, were last year's local Connaught Cup winners, being nosed out by the North Shore All-Blacks after a smart game.

Macdonald Park, located in the heart of the James Bay district, will have its first real test of the year on that day and the huge playing field will present a colorful sight with the uniformed soldiers mixing with the winter-garbed lady fans.

DECISION OF ENGLAND TO BE WAITED ON

Canada to Mark Time for Mother Country's Verdict About Games

MONTREAL, Nov. 2 (AP).—Canada will wait the decision of England before replying to Germany's official invitation to participate in the 1936 Olympic Games at Berlin. It was decided unanimously here today at a special meeting of the Canadian Olympic committee.

P. J. Mulqueen, of Toronto, chairman of the committee, said the matter would be discussed fully at the annual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Association of Canada, in Halifax, November 22, when the annual meeting of the Olympic committee would also be held.

If the invitation is accepted, 120 athletes will carry the challenge of the Maple Leaf to the Winter games, it was announced.

The committee acknowledged invitation of the German Olympic committee to send thirty boys between the ages of fifteen and eighteen to view the games at Germany's expense, and thirty physical education instructors to attend the conference of physical education held in conjunction with the games.

TO SELECT BOYS
It was decided a special committee would be named at the annual meeting in Halifax to select the boys and educationists to make the trip. Dr. A. S. Lamb, of McGill University; Dr. M. C. Hart, of University of Western Ontario, and J. H. Crocker, of London, secretary of the committee, were suggested by the committee as members of the special body.

Possibility that Canada would not be able to send a team of speed skaters and figure skaters, unless more funds were raised, was mentioned by William Houghton, president of the Olympic skating committee and of the Canadian Amateur Skating Association.

"Canada will probably be represented by eight skaters," he mentioned by William Houghton, president of the Olympic skating committee and of the Canadian Amateur Skating Association.

MILLER NETS BOTH GOALS IN VERDICT OVER GREENSHIRTS

Centre Accounts for Markers in Esquimalt's 2-0 Victory Against Victoria West in Only First Division Match Played—Winners Move Ahead of Idle City Eleven

Making the best of their scoring opportunities in the first half, Esquimalt slipped quietly into first place in the First Division of the Victoria and District Football League yesterday afternoon at Bullen Park by blanking a hard-fighting Victoria West eleven, 2-0. It was the only senior match on the menu and a fairly large crowd watched the dockers win in their own backyard.

The other scheduled match between Saanich Thistles and Victoria City was postponed, due to the hard condition of the Athletic Park.

Although the greenshirts were forced to play one man short most of the initial session, they had many more scoring chances than the dockers, but just could not find the net. The Wests had the edge in this period and held their own in the final forty-five minutes, but goals were out of the question. Alf Hood, Esquimalt goalie, handled himself in great fashion when the Wests were driving goalward in the last half.

After several up-and-down movements by both teams, Stewart got the first shot of the tussle, but Restall saved nicely. Lambie was sent through a minute later, but he lost possession when too slow to deliver his drive. Esquimalt broke in the clear again and McAllister's first-timer skimmed the woodwork.

Back came the Wests and Hood was called upon to make some fine saves and clearances. He gave the Wests a corner from Morgan's fine cross, but the goalie cleared.

WESTS PRESSING
Goalie Hood fell to the ground to stop McCall and then got his hands on a dangerous header from the same player after Morgan had centered. The Wests were pressing hard, despite the shortage, and again Hood had to go to the ground to block a wicked shot from Bell. As play continued, Gavin Jack came on for the greenshirts and went to centre. Lambie going to left wing.

Hood cleared twice in a few minutes and then the dockers broke fast and forced their first corner, but Restall tipped it away. Esquimalt put on the pressure for the next few minutes and Laird, who turned in a great game at fullback, headed behind Holtum's bullet shot. From the flag kick Esquimalt nearly scored from a melee, but Laird again saved the day, clearing as the ball nearly rolled over the line. Half-time found the teams scoreless.

DOCKERS OPEN SCORE
From the centre after the switch-over, Hood saved from Lambie's cross and then Morgan's hard drive was blocked by March. Morgan gained possession again and smashed a sizzler over the bar, a shot that had the goalie beaten. The dockers got away, with Boyd doing the engineering and Miller, graded the crossbar after Restall had thrown clear a shot. After ten minutes Worswick hit a first-timer, which Right after, Miller hit the post on McAllister's centre and Stewart shot wide of the goal with a great chance in front of him. The Wests pressed hard for the next ten minutes, but Hood took care of everything that came his way.

Esquimalt's final goal came from the toe of Miller. The centre took possession near the penalty area and tricked his way into position to pick the corner of the net twenty minutes from time. The Wests had several chances in the last few minutes, but failed to register.

NORTH SHORE AND SAINTS IN DEADLOCK

Soccer Teams Battle to 3-3 Tie in Inter-City League Fixture

VANCOUVER, Nov. 2 (AP).—The lively North Shore club, holders of the cellar position in the Inter-City Soccer League standings, held the third place St. Saviours club to a 3-3 draw in a league battle today. The standings remained unchanged by the contest.

Having an edge almost throughout the entire battle, which saw all but one of the six goals scored in the first half, it was only the effort of McMurdo, brilliant left winger of the Saints, that held the North Shore team in check—an effort that netted all three of the Saints' goals. Ashion opened the scoring and minutes of play with a drive that gave Rabbit, Saints' custodian, no chance to save.

McMurdo equalized for the Saints on a beautiful pass which he drove into the net from close in, and, as the eyes of the spectators followed him they saw another close-in drive from his boot put the Saints one up.

ON EQUAL TERMS
Spencer, tricky North Shore member, distracted Rabbit's attention as the goalie was about to punch the ball out and as a result the sphere was deflected into the Saints' net to put North Shore back on equal terms.

McMurdo again became the centre of attention just before half-time. Beating two men to a near-corner kick he gained control of the ball and a well-placed shot into the net from the side made it 3-2 for Saints. The score stood unchanged at half-time.

After repeated tries to crash through the strong defensive forces of St. Saviours, vainly trying to protect their one-goal margin, Ashion, of North Shore, was given his chance in front of Rabbit's goal. He kicked the sphere from out of a scramble of feet and caught Rabbit unawares, the ball dribbling into the net.

MARROONS DEFEAT RAMBLERS, 3-1

WINNIPEG, Nov. 2 (AP).—Despite injuries in the ranks, Philadelphia Ramblers, of Canadian American League, gallantly fought all the way before succumbing, 2-1, to Montreal Maroons, of the National Hockey League, tonight in the final of their two-game hockey exhibition series. Ramblers took the first, 2-1.

The first period was scoreless. Jon Lamb took Alan Shield's pass late in the second to put Maroons in the lead. Alex Shipley tied the score two minutes later after a smart play around the Montreal goal. Mac and Neil Calville, drew assists on the play.

Russell Blinco sank the winning goal when he lifted a high drive through Ramblers' defence, coming from the right wing. The rubber found its mark in the netting just inside the goal post.

ABERDEEN AND CELTIC DRAW AWAY FROM RANGERS

Dons Beat Queen Of South to Hold Premier Position

Continue to Set Pace in First Division of Scottish League by 4-3 Win—Four Penalties in Match—Celtic Defeats Dundee—Sunderland, Derby and Huddersfield Town in Tie

GLASGOW, Nov. 2 (P)—What appeared to be just another Saturday in Scottish football turned out to be the most exciting— from both a spectator's and player's standpoint— of the present campaigning.

There was much scanning of record books tonight as a result of the 4-3 win turned in by the league-leading Aberdeen eleven over Queen of South. Four penalty kicks were awarded and each time the recipient counted.

While all this was going on, fireworks were popping at Hamilton, where the down-trodden Clyde outfit tackled the Accies. The game, which ended in a goalless draw, was a rough and tumble affair, climaxed by the Hamilton goalkeeper being ordered off the field for his part in a melee, and a section of the crowd invading the pitch. Police were called to clear the grounds.

Top teams remain "as you were" in the league table. The Dons occupy No. 1 position, followed by Celtic. Glasgow Rangers hold third place.

FOUR PENALTIES

Queen of South, fighting desperately for its first "away-from-home" game of the year, gave Aberdeen a real fright before dropping off the field. The four penalty goals were divided between Armstrong, of Aberdeen, and Tulip, of the visitors. Beaton and Devine split the Dons' other pair, with Cumming notching the Duns' first goal.

Clyde came within a shade of taking both points from Hamilton in the dying moments of the game. McLaren took over the goal-keeping duties after Morgan was sent off, and spectacularly saved a penalty kick taken by McPhail.

Rangers piled up a three-game lead against Queen's Park before half time at Ibrox, but could not hold back the amateurs' thrusts in the final forty-five minutes, and had to be content with a 3-3 tie. Drysdale, too, and Venters scored the champions' goals. Souter, Holland and Crawford netted for the visitors.

Celtic, playing at home, had an easy day against Dundee, winning 4-2. Delaney led the scorers with two for the Celts, with Crum and McGorrie completing the scoring. Plays and Players

Good Story, Catchy Music In Dominion Musical Film

Combining a diverting story and is himself appointed dance director. Supplementing the main romance, is a rivalry for the affections of Thomas Beck between Miss Daniels and her screen daughter, Rosina Lawrence.

"Music Is Magic" provides a fast-moving, tuneful vehicle for talented Alice Faye. Her singing of the four hit numbers, including "Music Is Magic," "La Cumbra" and "Honey Chile," is one of the high-spots of the picture.

Ray Walker, as the young master of ceremonies who tries to project his sweetheart, Miss Faye, into stardom in Hollywood, is likeable and makes the most of an important role.

The comedy is handled by Mitchell and Durant. Bebe Daniels gives a clear-cut characterization to the role of the waning picture star whose temperamental tantrums serve to give Miss Faye her first break in the motion pictures.

The plot concerns itself with the efforts of Miss Faye, aided by her sweetheart and two friends, Mitchell and Durant, to win fame and fortune in Hollywood.

Miss Faye manages to get a part in a chorus in a musical in which Miss Daniels is the star. Mitchell and Durant are cast in the roles of "half-wits" in the picture.

When Miss Daniels goes temperamental, Walker succeeds in obtaining the starring role for Miss Faye.

"LET'S BE FRIENDS" AT EMPIRE SHORTLY

Hammersmith-Broadway is the locale of the London scene in "Let's Be Friends," by Miss Dorothy Crighton.

Arthur Groves and William Hope have the male leads, and Mrs. Mabel Ridley is the comedienne. These names need no introduction to followers of amateur dramatists in Victoria, and their appearance on any programme is an assurance of well enacted comedy.

Others in the cast are John Christie, who plays the part of a genial London bobby; Tom Dalziel, Lionel Westfield and Margaret Dalziel.

This scene was written and personally directed by Chris. Freer, who has long been associated with the theatre. Mr. Freer was for ten years on the professional stage in England and was with such well known artists as Sir Herbert Beerbaum Tree and Percy Hutchinson, with whom he was on tour.

"Let's Be Friends" a cavalcade of understanding, will be at the Empire Theatre, Friday and Saturday, November 8 and 9.

Little Orpheum Offers Romance

Two weeks of teasing of anxious Hollywood actresses preceded Paramount's choice of Jean Parker, young brunette actress, for a leading role opposite George Raft in "Limehouse Blues," coming tomorrow to the Little Orpheum Theatre.

"Jean Parker" was, until two years ago, totally unknown to the screen. Her big break came when she was discovered in a Pasadena New Year parade by talent scouts and given her opportunity at film stardom.

Directed by Alexander Hall, "Limehouse Blues" tells the story of an enduring and tender love with a setting of the London embankments and the terror of the Chinese underworld for its background.

CONCERT PARTY TO AID LONGSHOREMEN

The Headliners' Concert Party will appear at the Empire Theatre, Monday evening, to provide an entertainment in aid of the longshoremen's wives and children.

This concert party is comprised chiefly of old-time variety performers, who will give an entertainment well worth seeing. There will be a ten-piece orchestra in attendance.

There will be eighteen acts on the programme, and Tom Obee will act as master of ceremonies.

One thing that makes the college freshmen seem young is that he wants to be mistaken for a sophomore.

MAKING PLANS FOR POPPY DAY

Ladysmith Council Gives Permission to Ladies' Auxiliary

LADYSMITH, Nov. 2.—Alderman J. D. Giovando occupied the chair at the regular meeting of the City Council in the absence of Mayor Walkem, who was engaged in judicial business.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Army and Navy Veterans' local unit 20, invited permission to hold Poppy Day on Saturday, November 9, and this was granted, while the officers of the Army and Navy unit invited the council to participate with them in divine service at the United Church on November 10. The invitation was accepted.

The auditor submitted a report for nine months ending September 30, and the matter was held over until the next meeting, while the members of the council have an opportunity to peruse the particulars.

The special committee for the purpose reported that arrangements for the official observance of Remembrance Day were in hand and making good progress, and the programme will be similar to that of last year, with a service and a guard of honor at the memorial on First Avenue. Completed plans would be given to the council at the next meeting.

An offer to purchase a lot for $10, if the applicant were given an unoccupied house on another lot, was indignantly rejected by the council. He will be asked to make a separate bid for the old house. Another applicant will be asked to offer $150 instead of $75 for another property.

SEE SUBMARINES AT GALAPAGOS ISLANDS

GUAYAQUIL, Ecuador, Nov. 2 (AP).—Dispatches from the Galapagos Islands yesterday said an unidentified fleet of submarines was manoeuvring near San Cristobal Island last night.

The submarines were described as equipped with electric projectors. On Santa Cruz Island, the dispatches continued, was a ship of large tonnage, presumably the "mother ship."

Other dispatches from Balboa, C.Z., said the submarines were not from the United States.

CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

By Ely Culbertson

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

IRREGULAR LEADS

The bridge player who knows all the conventional leads, as every player should, and then clings to them with unvarying consistency, is going to save his partner a lot of headaches. The trouble is he does the same thing for the declarer, who will appreciate the kindness more than the partner. And while the standpat leader may truthfully claim he makes no mechanical mistakes in his leads, he also will not make a lot of points which might have been his.

To collect the maximum on defense a player must have not only full knowledge of the correct procedure for conventional leads and plays, but an equally correct and indispensable technique of deception, or irregular leads and plays. These do not have a vague generality but form a definite part of the regulation code of good card play.

A lead of play which is made contrary to the usual convention, with a view to misleading the opponent, is deceptive or irregular. It is sometimes called a bluff or "psychic." The technique of such leads covers the range of situations in which it is less dangerous to fool your partner than to tell the truth to the enemy.

You may have a partner who is blithely unaware of the finer implications of your conventional leads. Skill then consists in not persisting with all the conventional niceties of the play, but in trying to find the best means of keeping him in the state of torpor. In other situations a wide-awake partner will "smell the rat" before the opponents and understand your psychic before the declarer does so.

There are good and bad deceptions. The characteristic of bad deceptive leads, like anything stupid, is that there is neither rhyme nor reason to them. If, for instance, holding Q J 10 9, a player leads the Jack, he will have fooled the declarer completely, but what good does it do him? He also will fool his partner, and it may easily cost a trick if the dummy should hold K x x and partner, upon dummy's play of a still card, should play the Ace. In low card cases the situation plainly exists in which a deceptive lead can do no real harm to partner, even if he is fooled. This is particularly true when the choice of suits for a lead is reduced to a doubleton headed by a Jack or higher honor.

With Q 8, if I must lead it, I much prefer the lead of the eight to the "supporting" lead of the queen. It might work out as it did in the following situation:

DUMMY ♠ 7 4 3
WEST ♠ Q 8
EAST ♠ A 9 5 2

DECLARER ♠ K J 10 6

Against a contract of four spades, West was hard put to it for a suitable lead, but finally chose the eight of hearts. His partner took with the Ace, and having nothing better to offer, returned a heart. Declarer, thinking the eight had been a singleton, finessed. After gathering in

Dietitians Form Victoria Group

A meeting of interest recently to all graduates in home economics was held at the home of Dr. Olga Jardine for the purpose of forming a Victoria branch of the recently-formed Canadian Dietetic Association.

A constitution was drawn up, based on that of the Canadian Dietetic Association. It was decided to hold meetings every two months for the purpose of discussing new developments in nutritional research, and allied subjects of interest to dietitians, household economics teachers, and others interested in nutritional research.

OFFICERS NAMED
Miss Yvonne Love was elected president of the group; Miss Mary Peach, secretary, and Miss Ethel Stubbards, chairman of the programme committee.

The membership is confined to all graduates of home economics courses who are eligible for membership in the Canadian Dietetic Association, but the meetings are open to all those interested in the discussions and work of the club.

Anyone who is interested in joining the club and who has not been notified of the meetings may obtain further information from the secretary, Miss Peach, at #0113. The next meeting will be held early in January.

FEATHER IN HER HAT

by JULIE ANNE MOORE

CHAPTER XXV

"I've never before run into a case with so many apparent contradictions," Mollie's friend at police headquarters told her. "To date we've pushed the investigation in two directions, first, to trace Wells' movements before he came to Washington. In this we have completely failed."

"And then we've tried to check the story in this thing you've just read," the other police officer added. "The story is nonsense, and the authorities at Oxford scoff at the idea that anyone answering Wells' description was a student there. Which leaves us with just two established facts: the two books mentioned as being the work of Wells, 'The Police Are Puppets' and 'The Strange Case of Dr. Chuzzle', were published in London at about the time this diary thing says that Wells was there—and the identity of the author was never discovered."

Mollie found Carl waiting at the office. He said Senator Runbrecker had received a ransom note. "Fifty thousand snappers," said Carl. "The note said they would send him instructions as to where, when and how in the next few days, what do you think about it, Mollie?"

"Me?" asked Mollie, shrugging.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING IS "POINT-OF-SHOPPING" ADVERTISING!

Newspaper advertising is read at the time the prospect is consciously planning to make an immediate purchase.

"I'm like Ann. I don't think any more, but I can't quite get it into my head that Seima was kidnapped."

"And I can't either," Carl agreed. "Personally, I think the Senator is off his nut."

As Mollie told Bill when he came unexpectedly to the apartment Wednesday evening things were popping. Senator Runbrecker had received a second note raising the ransom to $75,000 and advising that he would receive specific instructions before the end of the week.

Carl who had been on the go all night and day since Seima's disappearance, had finally collapsed and had been rushed to a hospital suffering from what was diagnosed as a form of epilepsy.

And Bill himself had brought the news concerning the now famous case of the two pine boxes.

The two boxes, it seemed, had been delivered to the Capitol some time around the middle of December. Tacked to the top of each was a neatly printed card reading:

VERY CONFIDENTIAL!
The Exhibits Contained Herein, for the Use by the Munitions Investigating Committee, to be Kept on the Floor of the House of Representatives Until Congress Convenes. When the Speaker of the House Will Have Them Delivered to the Chairman of the Committee.

A member of the Capitol police had opened one of the boxes and found it filled with large, empty brass shells. The boxes were then placed in the centre aisle of the House of Representatives.

As Bill had got the story, the boxes had remained on the floor of the House until the day before Congress was to convene when they were removed to an ante-room. There they had been forgotten and not until the day before had an attendant come across them by accident and notified the Speaker. Suspecting a practical joke, the Speaker had then opened. One box contained empty brass shells and weighed approximately two hundred and fifty pounds; the other was thickly lined with absorbent cotton and under a loose layer of cotton was snuggled over a space of about two feet and was bedded down in a mould that suggested the outline of a human body.

The Capitol police recalled the discovery of Deane Runbrecker's body in the Speaker's chair and notified police headquarters. A truck driver and his helper told detectives that they had taken the boxes from a plane and they were given to understand they had just been flown down from Boston by Lee Monday.

The trucking company said the letter which had served as their order to do the hauling. The letter was on stationery of the Senate Military Affairs Committee and bore, as signature, the name of Senator Runbrecker, dead, from Boston. Mollie said, "They'll want to question Lee now, of course."

"Naturally," said Bill. "They've already wired and got a reply. He promised to land at the airport not later than Saturday evening."

Mollie groaned. "Poor Ann! I suppose we ought to let her know Lee's coming ahead of schedule."

"For what?" Bill demanded. "She's coming back from Elmville Sunday, anyway. Let her alone. She needn't know anything about this. The police ought to be through with Lee before she blows in." He got up and took a turn around the room. "Have you ever stopped to think how much unpleasantness we've had crammed into our lives these last six months. Mollie?"

A sad little smile crept on Mollie's lips. "I'm afraid I've thought of little else. It all began the night Ann and Rita came. Odd how we've changed since then. We're not the same people. You less than any of us. All the fun's gone out of you, Bill."

He nodded, gravely. Suddenly his eyes sought hers. "Look, Mollie, you're not holding anything against me?"

Her quiet smile answered that before she spoke. "Because you thought you were in love with me—and then discovered you were not?" She shook her head very slowly. "Think what a tragedy it would have been if you hadn't realized it in time. That's one reason I'll always be eternally grateful to Ann."

Bill stared. "I don't get it."

"About Ann? Don't pretend with me, Bill. I think I knew you were in love with Ann before you realized it yourself. If I've any regret at all, it is that Ann didn't fall in love with you—I think she would have if you'd ever given her half a chance."

Lee's telegram, relayed by Mollie, saying that he had been called to Washington to attend a "hearing" and would probably reach the capital late Saturday afternoon was delivered to Ann Thursday morning while she was at breakfast. Twice she read the message through, then laid it beside her father's plate, abruptly got up from the table and hurried from the room.

Ann's father found her lying face down across her bed. "How come?" he asked, dropping down beside her. "One day you spend a good hour telling me how much you love your famous young man; the next day you get a message from him and you blow up. Better get your old dad about it, hadn't you? Or aren't we pals any longer?"

Ann's hand felt around for his and slid into it, but it was many moments before she sat up and dried her eyes. "There was nothing to tell. She just felt like crying, that was all."

Her father got up from the bed. "Then we're all washed up—is that it?" From now on there are secrets you dad mustn't know," Ann suddenly pulled him down beside her, snuggled into his arms and between sobs told him what was in her heart.

She told him of all those things which had complicated her life during her six months in Washington. Of Mollie and Carl and Seima, and of Rita's affair with Carl. She told him of her engagement to Lee and how and why she had broken it—and how she had let Lee give her the lovely ring a second time. And last of all, hesitatingly and with much difficulty, she told him about Bill Hudson.

"Now that I've got it out of my system, let's forget about it, Dad," she smiled up at him. "You can't live my life for me, you know. Lee's been marvelous and he—he loves me. There's no out!"

Mr. Rogers said after a moment, "This Bill fellow must be an awful book. He watched the color rising in her cheeks. "No red-blooded man would stand by and see another man walk off with the girl he loved."

"Don't you see, Dad," Ann said, gently, "it's impossible for you to understand. He's a red-blooded man. That's why I didn't want to tell you about it."

The day passed and Ann did not tell her mother she must leave on the morrow.

"Don't suppose I could persuade you to go back to Washington tomorrow instead of Sunday, Baby?" her father said with a grin when he returned from his office. There was to be a House committee hearing on a bill in which his concern was whether or not the hearing was set for Friday afternoon and he had been asked to appear.

"Ann never suspected he was improvising as he went along."

"But we can't leave Mother here alone," Ann said.

Mrs. Rogers smiled. "When your father says 'Baby' he means you. He hasn't been away from home with me since we were married."

Ann's father took his wife in his arms and kissed her and held her off, laughing.

When the telephone rang early Friday-morning Rita answered it. Her heart jumped when she heard Carl's voice.

"Darling! . . . They said you wouldn't be home for the holiday for two or three days. Are you quite all right?"

Carl said he hadn't asked permission to leave, he had simply notified them he was leaving. "I'm starting for Chicago with the Senator in a few minutes, Rita," he said. "It's about Seima, of course, but I'll have to explain when I see you." "We expect to be back sometime tomorrow." A quiet excitement was in his voice and after he had hung up Rita recalled petulantly that he hadn't even said goodbye.

He's probably had instructions to bring the ransom money there," Mollie said, when Rita repeated Carl's message. "Too bad you didn't warn Carl to watch his step. I wouldn't care to be shut up in the same airplane with Senator Runbrecker. If he isn't mad, I never saw anyone who was."

"I imagine Carl can take care of himself," Rita said, musingly. "You can't possibly think the Senator killed."

Mollie cut in, "You and I were warned that two persons were to die—and both of them are now dead. That's all I know."

"But what you're forgetting that the third warning was that Senator Runbrecker would be killed by falling from the top of the Washington Monument?"

"That was plain nonsense," Mollie declared. "Has he ever been up in the Washington Monument? All the windows are barred now; have been since three persons committed suicide by jumping. So the Senator couldn't get out to fall from the top of the monument!"

BARGES AND PLANE ARE LOST IN GALE IN ARCTIC REGION

MOSCOW, Nov. 2 (CP-Havas).—Two barges and a rescue plane were feared lost last night in a violent gale over the White Sea in the Far North Arctic region.

Ice waters whipped to fury by the gale were believed to have engulfed the Severodvinsk and the twelve members of her crew. The Barge 101 was sent to her aid, but no word was heard from her. An airplane dispatched to search for the two vessels also was missing.

SOLO ARTISTS PLAN CONCERT

Will Give Programme Friday, November 15, in Aid of Church Funds

Chopin, famous for his waltzes, and Mendelssohn, who is not only noted for his pianistic compositions, but also his oratorios, will be interpreted by Miss Grace Genn, A.T.C.M. and Miss Isabelle Crawford, gold medal soprano, respectively, at the Solo Performers' concert to be given in Fairfield United Church on November 15 at 8:15 p.m. The concert is in aid of church funds, and tickets are now on sale at Fletcher Bros.

Miss Crawford has won outstanding distinction at the Vancouver Musical Festival, winning the gold medal in the mezzo soprano class, later the gold medal in the lyric soprano class, the cup for highest marks in the festival, and a cup for a duet in which she and Frank Tupper sang. For her contributions to the programme, she has been named "Hear Ye Israel," from "Elijah," and "Jerusalem" from "St. Paul."

Mrs. Grace Genn will be her accompanist.

Miss Genn has selected two of Chopin's compositions. The first will be one of his posthumous works, "Waltz in D," which, when discovered after the composer's death, added another gem to the galaxy of waltzes left by the master. Her second waltz is quite brilliant and scintillating. The second number will be "Nocturn in B," a very melodious piece with a fine singing melody. It is noted for its peculiar climax, and in some concluding declamatory passages.

The Solo Performers' Club held a rehearsal last night in preparation for the first concert that this organization has ever given.

What Today Means

"SCORPIO"

If November 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. from 3:45 to 5:45 p.m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a.m. from 1:45 to 3:45 p.m. and from 5:45 to 7:45 p.m.

Companionship is essential to make this day thoroughly enjoyable, so seek it. Friends may be only waiting for the opportunity to spring a pleasant surprise that they have in store for you, so why not give them the chance? Do not be secretive about anything which you feel might be of interest to them. There might be something you are feeling discouraged about. Remember the most discouraged conditions usually have a way of being straightened out in an unexpected and comparatively easy manner. Be ready to answer good fortune's knock for it is traveling in your direction. This is an auspicious day for friends to get together for sociability's sake. The more informal the entertainment, the more delightful it is apt to prove. Married and engaged couples, and those who are in love, will do well to let love inspire them to do some considerate little act this day, which they know will help make it brighter for all concerned.

If a woman and November 3 is your birthday, the gipsy trail has a strong appeal to you. Never permit it to interfere with either domestic or business obligations, as complications are likely to cause worry. You are probably a great lover of poetry or fiction, and if you have not already tried your hand at writing, it might not be a wasted effort to make the attempt. You do not have to know how to anyone to gain recognition, as your individuality has sufficient charm to assure your popularity. Besides the pen, the brush, singing, teaching or selling are the most likely activities through which you may be able to become financially independent. Marriage perhaps has more to offer you in the way of worth while compensations than has possibly a business career.

The child born on November 4 generally, as soon as it reaches the age of reasoning, can be depended on to be truthful and obedient. Its parents probably will have very little cause for worry regarding its school work or popularity.

If a man and November 4 is your natal day, if you will learn thoroughly one business, trade or profession, and stick to that, your future has great promise. As an artist, lawyer, politician, engineer, journalist or salesman you will score the highest results. As a husband you should be most successful.

He was convicted on the second charge of obstructing Fishery Officers Cyril Raymond Fervie and C. Eastwood in the execution of their duties, and was given a $10 fine or one month's imprisonment. Both convictions will be appealed.

SCHOONER BURNS; ANOTHER MISSING

Crew Reaches Safety in Newfoundland Cove—Other Ships Unreported for Ten Days

ST. JOHN'S Nfld., Nov. 2.—With one schooner lying at the bottom off Partridge Point, after burning today, fears were held tonight for another, missing more than a week.

The auxiliary schooner Arnoldo, owned by James Morris, of White Bay, was abandoned and sank in White Bay on the Northern Newfoundland coast when she was raked from stem to stern by fire. The crew safely reached Cochinman's Cove in one of the vessel's dories. The fish-laden schooner Clunie Dalton sailed from Battle Harbor ten days ago for Catalina, but has not been heard of since. It is believed she may have foundered in the North Atlantic storm of October 24.

The little girl came home from school the other day looking very unhappy. "Some people," she announced glumly, "have parents they can be proud of."

Her mother, very much startled, asked what on earth she meant. "Well," exclaimed the downcast youngster, "Glady's mother was a circus performer, and you were only a high school teacher!"

Don't Guess But Know

Whether the "Pain" Remedy You Use is SAFE

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations.

THE person to ask whether the preparation you or your family are taking for the relief of headaches and pains of rheumatism, neuritis and neuralgia is SAFE to use regularly is your family doctor. Ask him particularly in regard to "ASPIRIN."

He will tell you that before the discovery of "Aspirin" most "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as upsetting to the stomach and, often, bad for the heart. Which is food for thought if you seek quick, safe relief.

Scientists rate "Aspirin" among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and the pains of rheumatism, neuritis and neuralgia. And the experience of millions of users has proved it safe for the average person to use regularly. In your own interest remember this: "Aspirin" Tablets are made in Canada. "Aspirin" is the registered trade-mark of the Bayer Company, Limited of Canada. Be sure to look for the name Bayer in the form of a cross on every tablet.

Starting Another Controversy Along Coast Waterfronts

Longshoremen Refuse to Handle "Hot" Cargo From Gulf Ports—Vancouver Men Present Five-Point Offer to Federation

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 2 (AP)—A new "hot" cargo controversy entered Pacific Coast waterfront circles today when longshoremen failed to unload a shipment of Gulf of Mexico freight aboard the motorship Katrina Luckenbach at San Pedro.

A conference between waterfront employers and stevedores was scheduled with a view toward settlement of the dispute.

The embargo on Gulf cargo was ordered last week by National Longshoremen President Joseph P. Ryan, but early today was postponed until Monday. Despite the reversal, Pacific Coast District President William J. Lewis directed that the ban be forthwith.

Boats of the embargo is a strike of union dock workers at various Gulf points. The cargo involved has been loaded by non-union labor, longshoremen officials said, and is therefore labeled "hot."

Coming in from the Philippines by way of China and Japan ports, the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Russia, Captain H. James, R.N.R., commander, will arrive at Rihet Piers tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, according to wireless advice received at the local office of Canadian Pacific Steamships. This should bring the Russia up along the coast of Rihet Piers an hour later. The Russia has passengers, mails and cargo for Victoria.

Bound for the United Kingdom, the British freighter Rosetown, Captain J. W. Taylor, R.N.R., sailed from Rihet Piers with lumber cargo early yesterday morning, while the Japanese freighter Kohan Maru, after taking on her lumber cargo, sailed for the local assembly plant, shifted to Vancouver during the afternoon.

ORGANIZING TOUR PARTY

Victorian Busy Planning Details of Travel Trip Through Orient

Although the Summer of 1935 is seven or eight months away at the present moment, many persons are no doubt already tentatively planning where and how their next annual vacation will be spent when the holiday months roll around again. Thinking about a holiday, too, even a long way ahead, gives a lot of pleasure to the would-be traveler.

The Orient has always figured more or less prominently in this pre-travel planning. The countries on the other side of the Pacific have always had a strong appeal for Westerners, and cruises there continue to grow in popularity, particularly those personally conducted. A Victorian will head a tour party to Japan, China and the Philippines during the next holiday season, the preliminary arrangements for this having been under way for some time.

Ex-Liverpool Bootblack Believed in Carrying Sail On Passage

FLIGHT... by W. D. TIPTON and J. H. MASON

SUCH A TANK MAY BE MADE BY COVERING THE NORMAL METAL TANK WITH A LAYER OF LIVE RUBBER WHICH PREVENTS LEAKAGE WHEN THE TANK IS CRUSHED.

McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N. Y.

THE LIVE RUBBER COVERING AUTOMATICALLY SEALS BULLET HOLES AND THUS WOULD PREVENT FIRES RESULTING FROM HITS BY INCENDIARY BULLETS.

Too often severe airplane crashes are followed by fire caused by rupture of the fuel tanks permitting the highly inflammable aviation gasoline to spray over the wreckage, converting the wreckage into a funeral pyre.

This fire hazard can be eliminated. Crash or bullet proof tanks have been talked about during and since the war, but, like the weather, nothing has been done about them.

The crash proofing of a fuel tank is no mystery. It consists of covering the tank with an inch or so of live rubber or some other resilient material so that when the tank is crushed, the rubber covering retains the gasoline, at least long enough to prevent its splashing over the engine during the crash.

Crash proofing a fuel tank makes it nearly bullet proof, for the covering automatically seals bullet holes. The danger of the incendiary bullet is not the passage of the flaming missile through the fuel, for gasoline will burn only in the presence of air. It is the ignition of the fuel which rushes out of the bullet holes into the fuselage that turn the stricken war plane into a flaming coffin.

Crash-proofing tanks adds to their expense and weight, but, in the opinion of many is worth these additional penalties. An instance is recalled of an army flyer who was crawling away from his wreck when the flames which followed the crash overcame him.

TO WIN ONE'S SPURS

Today, both men and women of every class and calling win their spurs.

One wins one's spurs everywhere—in the office, on the field, in the laboratory, in the library.

Spurs, of course, though won are neither conferred, received, nor worn.

The expression is purely figurative, being used metaphorically in connection with recognition of outstanding initial achievement or accomplishment; the words, however, hark back to the times when spurs were both in sense and fact real.

The allusion is to the days when nobility was in flower; then people by their deeds of bravery, gallantry or aid to the state were rewarded with rank of knighthood, presented with and entitled to wear spurs.

"One of the tragedies of a theatrical man's life is the fact that no one ever gives us a dinner until we don't need it."—Channing Pollock.

Cold Nights Are Still Forecast

The mercury hit a new high for the present cold spell Victoria is experiencing, thus indicating that during the daytime at least temperatures are moderating somewhat. The minimum yesterday was twenty-nine degrees, but the outlook for the next twenty-four hours is light to moderate winds, continued fine and cold at night, the weather bureau weather has been general from the coast eastward to the Rockies. The barometer still remains high, no temperatures have occurred in over this province, and fine, cold the Prairies.

AT C.C.

FIFTY years ago, pupils of the first Saltspring Island school assembled to the clang of a cowbell, learned their three R's from a single plank blackboard, and killed the plentiful willow grouse with stones on the way home.

Now the progressive island boasts nine public schools, a high school and two private institutions. But the original little brown one-roomed building is still used at Beaver Point, and has the distinction of being in continuous use for half a century.

A virgin forest stood on the site of the present school fifty years ago. Farmers around Beaver Point realized that their children should have an education, so in May, 1885, a small clearing was laboriously made in the forest with axe, saw and fire. A narrow path was hacked down to the road leading to several farms, then a mere muddy wagon track.

Along the road from the tiny wharf and up the path to the clearing, oxen harnessed to "stone boats" hauled rough lumber which had been cut at Cowichan and Port Moody. A man whose name still flourishes on Saltspring Island, S. John Beddis, erected the humble school, with assistance of his two sons, Henry and Charles. Destined to be the first two pupils, the boys were filled with exciting thoughts of "school farms," homework and "hooky."

Plank for Blackboard

ROUGH wooden benches put together with old-fashioned square nails of the period served as desks. The first blackboard consisted of a plank six feet long and thirty inches wide. Mr. Beddis was puzzled for some time as to a proper covering for the board so the teacher could wield her chalk. He finally hit upon a messy mixture of lampblack and turpentine, which dried with a dead black surface. This work of art would form quite a contrast with blackboards of today, which are really green in color.

Throughout the "hot" summer, Mr. Beddis and his sturdy sons toiled to complete the schoolhouse in time for the autumn session. Great excitement prevailed on Saltspring Island on September 30, 1885, when the school opened with an enrolment of seventeen boys and girls. Beaver Point had gone modern, much to the envy of other communities on the island.

Scholars came from far and near, for the school district then included Beaver Point, Portland Island and Russel Island. A walk of two miles of more through timber, scrub, over rocks and across somebody's farm was not considered out of the ordinary by the pioneer pupils. They did not require much coaxing, for the novelty of going to school was a powerful magnet.

To arrive at school on time, the Beddis brothers had to travel two miles by boat along the rocky shore and then hike through a mile and a half of brush and forest in all kinds of weather. Brought up by the restless sea, they learned to handle a boat when most city children were still riding in perambulators. Many times the boys arrived home after dark, drenched to the skin by waves and rain. But their hardy constitutions and plenty of wholesome food stood them in good stead.

Early Teachers Given

BEAVER POINT farmers were confronted with the problem of securing a teacher for their new school. There were several persons on the island competent to teach, but they could not neglect their farms. Finally a visit was made to Victoria, where Miss Margaret Jackson was secured to teach reading, writing and arithmetic.

She now lives in retirement in Portland, Oregon.

Others who followed in Miss Jackson's footsteps included H. Levinge, Miss Flora Fraser, Robert Watkins, Miss Clara Furnace, Miss Isabelle Christie, R. R. Watson, Mrs. Aggie Ruckle, Norman Morrison, Miss Bertha Trage, Miss Margaret Sommerville, K. C. Symons, Miss Madge Day, Robert Thomas, Miss Jessie Kennedy, Miss Clarice Bussett, Miss Lily Rath, Thomas Woodcock, Miss Hammett, Miss Jessie McQueen, George Kirkendale, Miss Copley, James H. Monk, Miss Irene Fellow, Miss Inga Dahlman, Miss Olive Rogers, Miss Dorothy Dewar, Miss Dorothy Margison, Miss Edith Morton, Roy Bowitt and Miss Elma Morley, the present teacher.

George Kirkendale is now well known in British Columbia as Captain George Kirkendale, Victoria harbor-master. K. C. Symons has headed popular St. Michael's School for boys for twenty-six years.

Mr. Symons wistfully recalls that his first teaching position in the Province on arrival from England was at Beaver Point in 1907 and 1908. He was in charge of seventeen pupils in grades from one to eight. Affairs of the school were administered then by Alexander

McLennan, J. Reynolds and A. Johnson.

Eggs Are Strange

HIS recounts that two of his smallest pupils were cared for by their twelve-year-old brother, while their father, a Greek fisherman, spent most of his time on the Fraser River. The oldest brother ever baked bread and mended their socks. One day Mr. and Mrs. Symons invited the lads to their home and served eggs for tea. The boys had never eaten eggs before, and were at a loss what to do with the strange-looking commodity.

Last September 30 was a memorable day at Beaver Point, for it marked the fiftieth anniversary of the old school. Ten of the original seventeen pupils lined up to the sound of the same old cowbell which called them to their studies in 1885.

Outstanding at the historical gathering were Alfred Ruckle, Henry D. Beddis, Charles E. Beddis, and Leon King. The four had much to recount of the days when they killed grouse with stones, sneaked into the woods at lunchtime to roll crude cigarettes from tobacco pilfered at the Beddis farm, and emulated the modern Tarzan by swinging from tree to tree without touching the ground.

They happily recalled the times when competitions were held at a nearby creek to see who could stand upon his hands under water the longest. They chuckled when Charles E. Beddis pointed with mingled pride and shamefacedness to the initials "C. E. B." carved deeply into the side of the school half a century ago. Mr. Beddis remembered that he had been trying out a new knife for which he had pestered his father.

Wish for Teacher

HENRY D. BEDDIS remembered that Miss Jackson once told his mother that he was the "worst and yet the best" pupil at school. The four old-timers agreed that the gathering would indeed be complete with Miss Jackson present to call the roll in her sweet voice.

Mr. Watson wistfully spoke of his teaching days at Beaver Point thirty-seven years ago. He expressed a desire to again stand in front of the little blackboard with pointer in hand as he taught "hook learning" to the rosy-checked farmers' sons and daughters.

A mile south of the school, close to the shore, lies what was once an ancient

Indian battleground. Many relics, such as stone axes, arrowheads, fragments of bows and arrows, necklaces, rings, pestles, skulls, bones and teeth, have been brought to light at various times.

It is believed that Haidas from Queen Charlotte Islands visited Saltspring Island on one or more occasions, bent upon wiping out the peaceful islanders. Several axes found were of stone peculiar to Queen Charlotte Islands, lending strength to the belief. The Beddis brothers recollected many a visit to this field of relics.

Tiny Skull Island was also visited by boys and girls of the early classes at Beaver Point. Still visible there are remains of the rough cabin of Medicine Man Charley and his wife Mary, both Cowichan Indians. Remnants of a fireplace, cleverly constructed out of sticks and clay, still cling to the monolithic hut.

Old Indian Legends

ALSO near the school are two large hollows, at one time the sites of Indian community houses. Nearby is an enormous heap of decaying clam shells, mute testimony to the aborigines' love of shellfish.

Alfred Ruckle and Leon King remembered a number of Indian legends of their boyhood. They recalled the story of the Indian chief's daughter who climbed in her sorrow to the summit of Maxwell Mountain, above Burgoyne Bay, and leapt to her death with the hope that she would join the spirit of her departed brave in the Happy Hunting Ground. Many Indians left the district, fearful that the girl's spirit would haunt them in the night.

Dwelling upon the island so long, they are familiar with its early history. The island was known as "Chuan" for a time, and later Saltspring when Hudson's Bay officers discovered several salty springs welling up from the ground. Capt. George Henry Richards, of H.M.S. Plumper, changed the name to Admiral Island in 1852, but the first settlers who arrived the same year hauled down the name of Saltspring until officially adopted in 1905.

Beaver Point was obviously named after the first steamship on the Pacific Coast, S.S. Beaver, which operated off the coast from 1836 to 1888. Mount Bruce, Cape Keppel, Baynes Mountain, changes Harbor, Fulford Harbor, and Burgoyne Bay, on Saltspring Island, all perpetuate naval names.

Two Remaining Mothers

MRS. ALEXANDER-McLENNAN and Mrs. S. Fisher, both seventy-seven years of age, are the only two remaining mothers who had children attending the first class at Beaver Point. The late Mr. McLennan for twenty-five years was postmaster at Beaver Point and had his office in what is now the dining room of the McLennan Farm. Sometimes on horseback or in a light wagon, he fetched the few letters from Burgoyne Bay on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays. In fair weather or foul, he kept his neighbors in touch with the outside world for a quarter of a century.

The two pioneer women were both present at the reunion. It would have been interesting to know their thoughts as they listened raptly to schoolmates of their own children talk of childhood fifty years ago.

One wonders what thoughts of the class of 1935 were as they heard those of 1885 tell of the simple pleasures which meant so much to them. Would they be happy without daily newspapers, radio, occasional visits to the city and library books? Perhaps not.

Many Visit School

PROF. E. M. STRAIGHT, of the Dominion Experimental Station, and Mrs. Straight were among the many visitors during the anniversary. Prof. Straight gave an interesting talk to both pupils of 1885 and 1935, followed by presentation of two crates of Samuel grown melons. A huge birthday cake baked by Mrs. H. Ruckle was decorated with tiny chocolates for the occasion.

Pupils at present attending the school are James Stewart, George Stewart, Hugh Stewart, Kathleen Stewart, Muriel Stewart, Isabelle Hillier, Joyce Moore, Corrie Tremblay, Chester Reynolds, Helen Ruckle, Phyllis Pappenberg, Stuart McLennan and Nan Ruckle.

Alfred of the school are administered by a school board whose members are Henry Ruckle, Mrs. Dorothy McLennan and Thomas Hillier.

Mr. Ruckle's father was the first secretary of the School Board formed in 1885. At one time he acted as postmaster of the district.

The little brown schoolhouse stands in the clearing today as it has stood for half a century. It serves as a memorial to the higher aspirations of those who have gone before, and with its traditions an inspiration to those of today and tomorrow.

What Will Happen in 1936?

By "Old Moore"

That Canada is to enjoy a period of particularly good times, with great enrichment of trade and the vast of a member of the British Empire, is the prediction of "Old Moore" in his celebrated British series, whose prophecies are most widely read of all prophets in all parts of the world.

(Copyright Strictly Reserved)

THE year 1936 will be most eventful. Everybody will be anxious to know what the stars foretell in regard to the two burning questions of the day—on the addition of which depends the happiness or misery of countless millions of people, viz., unemployment and world disarmament.

Happily, war in Europe is unlikely in 1936, but there will surely be much revolutionary activity in certain states.

The British Empire as a whole will prosper and make good progress. Canada, in particular, should enjoy a period of much better trade than for some time past, while a royal visit to Canada will also help to keep the wheels of commerce moving. Australia will benefit from Jupiter's presence in Sagittarius, and trade and crops should be good, but a political crisis may have to be settled. In New Zealand serious earthquake shocks are threatened, particularly in May and November. While there is every reason to hope that South Africa will continue to go ahead, there are, unfortunately, signs of additions in the West Indies, owing to the culminating position of Herschel in 68 degrees West at the Spring Quarter Ingress, but the effects may possibly be confined to seismic disturbances. The Government of India will have some very serious troubles to surmount, for there are signs not only of crop failures and trade difficulties, but also, and infinitely worse, of much revolutionary activity. The Government, under the wise guidance of the Viceroy, will overcome all its difficulties, and in 1937 India will enter upon and enjoy a new era, in which the old evils of child marriage and illiteracy will be gradually eradicated.

International Trade

DURING the year 1936, great efforts will be put forth to curtail the existing restrictions on international trade and also to stabilize the exchange, but such efforts will be only partially successful. Ultimately, the gold standard will have to give place to a more elastic system, but its actual displacement is hardly likely for some years—that is, of course, from an astrological viewpoint. Abroad, the year will also be most eventful politically, and for the rulers of many countries extremely critical. There will be not a few revolutions. Bulgaria, whose king may lose his crown; Persia, Portugal and even Germany will all come strongly under the influence of the planet Herschel. As the fiery Mars will join his influence to that of this body, some bloodshed is only too probable. In Germany, the year will be fraught with particularly dangerous possibilities, and Chancellor Hitler may encounter sudden, unexpected and powerful hostility, as it has even begun to run its course. Matters may be further complicated by the demise of the Kaiser during the year.

followed by a demand in certain influential quarters that the position should now be regularized by a restoration of one of the Kaiser's sons. Prince Wilhelm, the Kaiser's fourth son, in such a case, will be a strong candidate for the purple, but although he is quite popular with the masses of the people, Germany may well be split into two or three hostile camps, and since in addition the economic outlook is unfavorable, the outlook for this great country is, unhappily, far from bright. It is to be feared that two or three years will elapse before tranquility is restored.

Trouble in France

FRANCE will be rent by faction and internal dissension and important political changes are likely. Elsewhere in Europe, while Spain will benefit to no small degree by Jupiter's transit through her ruling sign, Portugal will suffer by reason of Saturn's sojourn in Pisces. The ambitious schemes planned for Italy by Mussolini will not only meet with partial success—initial success, moreover, which will ultimately prove but delusive and illusory. Italy's position will be further complicated, not only by general world conditions, but also by the disturbed state of affairs in the Balkans.

In South America a minor revolution or coup d'état is not improbable in Brazil, while in Central America a severe earthquake is threatened in longitude 90 degrees West.

The health of President Roosevelt is seriously endangered by next year's eclipse, and his retirement from active politics, or alternatively, his death, is to be expected.

An interesting feature of British politics next year will be the ever-increasing prominence of a new party, whose forceful leader—a Scotsman—is possessed of quite exceptional ability. Himself an intellectual giant, and surrounded by younger men of great promise and talent, he is yet destined to see the realization of his plans, which are far-reaching, ingenious, and carefully thought out. From 1936 and onwards, the political arena will become ever more and more dominated by this new leader and his party, notwithstanding the most determined efforts to crush him.

Mr. Lloyd George

MEANWHILE, Mr. Lloyd George, next April—and May—will be under the powerful influence of the stationary position of Jupiter on the place of the moon at his birth. It is by no means impossible or even unlikely, that this brilliant and energetic statesman, his age notwithstanding, will stage a dramatic "comeback," and even profit by the even balance between the major parties to obtain, not only the adoption of many of the features of his "New Deal," but also high office for himself.

It is, of course, impossible to prognosticate the details of the solution of the political crisis envisaged for the Spring of 1936. I can and do, however, aver with confidence that, as a result of its solution, great and lasting benefits will accrue to the people of England. Thanks to a more progressive government and a constructive policy, not only will the hateful unemployment figures substantially be reduced, but also, owing to a great increase of the volume of trade, money will circulate more freely than for a very long time past. The "back to the land" movement will also receive a new and much-needed impetus. Much beneficial legislation will be enacted, especially in the latter part of the year, wages will be definitely improved. There will be an awakening of the creative and the spiritual faculties, and the spiritual forces of good—as signified by the ever-prominent position of Jupiter—will assert themselves. In the latter half of the year, too, the Government will exercise great moral power in international affairs to the benefit of the whole world, and British practices will be high-minded.

Turning for a moment to other matters, the astrological portents are that the Spring will be wet and stormy, but the Summer very, very hot indeed. May's position will see to that.

Finally, the year will close under excellent auspices, record trade figures, accompanied by proportionately happy Christmas festivities, being plainly indicated.

Ireland Disturbed

IMUCH regret to note that Ireland is likely to experience very disturbed conditions, that is, unless the planets Mars and Herschel fail to act as they have always done heretofore.

In May, particularly, conditions in the Emerald Isle will be difficult, and it is quite possible that even a fruitless attempt to change the Government may be made. Mr. de Valera will probably succeed in maintaining his position after having been beset throughout the Summer by many troubles.

I have purposely left the Far East for the concluding remarks of this brief astrological tour round the world. Russia will continue to progress, but will be most seriously concerned by the Jewish dissidents and the Siberian frontiers, and beyond. It is here where lies the greatest danger to world peace, and the outlook is most disturbing. The next conjunction of Saturn and Mars (January, 1937) falls out on the place of Herschel at the time of the last great conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter, and this sensitive point in the heavens is much concerned with the horoscope of the Manchukuo Empire, which, as at present constituted, may break up under the strain. One or two earthquakes in Japan may temporarily restrain the martial ardor of that great, but militant nation. Largely owing to this grave danger of war in the East, world-wide armaments will multiply notwithstanding a strong divergence of opinion in nearly all countries as to the wisdom of piling up barrels of gunpowder and at the same time perambulating around them, smoking "pipes of peace."

The British Government may yet play a leading and decisive part in bringing the world back to sanity, but the sands of time are fast running out. The British Empire, however, will not be drawn into any configuration which may arise. Indeed, its future seems assured and very bright, and its influences will be felt ever more and more for good in the world of tomorrow.

Best Books of the Week

By LIBRARIAN SERVICES

BOOKS on Soviet Russia continue to be of interest to most readers, and four of which have been added to the Public Library are important for those who wish to study all aspects of the Russian situation. "Soviet Rule in Russia" is a scholarly treatise written for scholars. Its purpose is to present an analysis of the structural system of the Soviet Government, and to examine the manner in which its various parts actually function. It is the product of several years of careful study of official documents, and supplies a mass of information of great value.

"Out of the Deep" also furnishes documentary evidence, being a collection of letters from Soviet timber camps, from the victims of collectivization. "Science and Education in the U.S.S.R." discusses the education system of the country. After reading this book, one realizes why science and education passed so rapidly into the hands of the Soviet Union, and why Soviet teachers and scientists are held in such respect. "Borzo" presents yet another side of the picture, the recollections of one who was a child at the time of the revolution. This book was the winner selected from nearly 500 manuscripts submitted in an autobiography contest. It was the only Russian entry, and was the unhesitating choice of the publishers.

An unusual book of polar adventure is "Mid-lee," the story of Alfred Wegener's last expedition to Greenland, on which he lost his life. Mr. Huxley's new book advocates startling measures—the products of a modern scientific mind. It is a stimulating book, with serious and practical implications.

"Sin and Sex" by Robert Briffault, constitutes an able and vigorous attempt on the part of the author to induce his readers to base their ethical opinions upon something other than the prejudices of the average members of the general public. Mr. Briffault may be right or may be wrong in any particular opinion he expresses, but in our respect, and that the most important, he is certainly profoundly right, namely, that his appeal is to reason and not to prejudice.

"What You Owe Your Child," by Willard L. Sperry, is a series of discussions for parents on the subject of the relationship between parents and children, especially in the matter of religion. Dr. Sperry shows how to lay a more substantial foundation, how to start the child out with a religious and moral philosophy that will stand the test of time. Widely known for the modern viewpoint of his teachings, he speaks to young parents in terms of their own experience. Much of the material of this book has been taken from his popular talks before the Junior League of New York.

"If I Were Dictator," by Julian Huxley, affords the unusual and stimulating spectacle of a biologist grappling with the problems of a dictatorship. An idealist in political philosophy, who nevertheless works along the hard paths of the concrete, he would base his rule on the principles of scientific humanism. He asserts that scientific research on a large scale is the only method capable of giving man control over nature and his destiny, and therefore, as dictator, he would substitute for the dying political economy of the nineteenth century a planned economy based on a central foundation, of self-sufficiency.

"Soviet Rule in Russia," by Walter R. Dalzell, will be the first book in any language covering the origins of Soviet institutions and the actual administration of the country. Special attention is given to the national policy of the Soviets. The interlocking directorship to be found in the "government" of Russia, the Russian Communist Party, and the Third International are explained in the light of the fixed aims of the Bolsheviks. The book is a result of observations made on the spot.

"Science and Education in the U.S.S.R." by A. P. Pinkevitch, gives an account of the achievements, difficulties, and shortcomings of the Soviet Union in the field of education and science. The system of education is thoroughly discussed; pre-school, vocational and higher education are described. Scientific research is a co-operative undertaking, abandoning the "theory of pure science" for a closer contact with Soviet life and work; in order to promote the unity of theory and practice. Its scope is illustrated by details pertaining to such subjects as astronomy, geology, chemistry, physics, biology, medicine and technical subjects.

"Fit With Me" by H. D. Davis, gives the irreducible minimum necessary to obtain an "A" license and call oneself a pilot. It is the A.B.C. of the game that is provided for by this book. All technicalities are made as simple as possible, and the understanding of the book demands no special knowledge from the reader. It is written by one of the best-known instructors of today, the pilot who directs the Brooklands School of Flying.

"Complete Course of Practical Flying," by G. L. P. Henderson, is a complete course for aviators, dealing with the subject in an elementary manner which is intelligible to every beginner. It is written by a pilot of over 4,000 hours' experience, and deals with almost every emergency, every vice, and every blatant fault.

"Out of the Deep," a collection of letters written from Soviet timber camps, reveals a state of affairs so terrible as to be almost incredible, and the authenticity of the documents, vouched for by Sir Bernard Pare, can be further established by the production of the originals. They are a human and poignant record of the sufferings of a people, and should be closely studied by anyone desirous of forming a fair opinion of the Russian situation.

"Mid-lee: The Story of the Wegener Expedition to Greenland," by J. George, is one of the most tragic and thrilling tales in the history of exploration. The object of the expedition was to establish a central station in the middle of the huge ice plateau which fills the interior of Greenland, and conduct there scientific experiments. Its location, the unusual nature of the expedition's work, and the remarkable life led by its members in their snow burrow, put this book in a different category from the general run of Polar books.

"Borzo: An Autobiography," by Igor Schwesoff, is a tale, for the most part, of constant hardship, of tragedy present or imminent, of hunger and want; but the high spirits and pride of youth, and the passion of art, carry its author almost melodiously along. Igor Schwesoff was the son of a guards colonel in the Russian Army, and his boyhood, of which he writes with clarity and charm, was spent in happy and even luxurious surroundings. He was ten years old when the Czar put the first strain on that pleasant life, and thirteen when the revolution destroyed it. We have had many recollections of that time, but few as yet, from the young who were then children.

Other books added recently are "Social Record of Christianity," by J. McCabe; "Economic Consequences of Power Production," by Fred Henderson; "International Relations," by R. L. Buell; "Vestiges of Pre-Metric Weights and Measures," by Arthur Edwin Kennedy; "Fact and Faith," by J. B. S. Haldane; "Introduction to Cytology," by Lester W. Sharp; "Textbook of Systematic Botany," by D. B. Swingle; "Principles of Animal Biology," by A. Franklin Shull.

A Good Gardener

EIGHTY years ago or thereabouts, a lad named William Robinson went to work in the Royal Society Botanical Gardens. His wages were nine shillings a week, about thirty-five cents a day.

He loved his work. He learned all he could about the plants he tended. Like all eager learners, he found kind teachers. As the years went on, he saved enough to buy a fine place of his own in the County of Sussex. He wrote one of the best of garden books, teaching people all over the Empire how to garden.

He made his own place an object lesson. It was and is a lovely park with water lilies, wisteria, clematis and a glorious rose garden. The miles of paths lead through beautiful woods.

Mr. Robinson lived to be ninety-six years old, enjoying to the last the beauty around him.

Before he left the world he had made more beautiful. Mr. Robinson gave his home "Gravetye Manor," to the British nation. Perhaps some of you will see it some day. If you are still young, then you will be glad that Mr. Robinson directed that your delight should not be marred by lectures or demonstrations. Your mind will be free to drink in the loveliness around and above you.

A mile of pennies equals in addition to the Adams Township Lutheran Church in Ohio. A total of 84,000 pennies was collected in one month by the Ladies' Aid Society to pay for construction of Sunday school rooms. Laid end to end, the pennies would stretch a mile. It required a truck to transport them to the bank.

Wealthy stamp collectors will be barred from the semi-annual exhibit planned by the Spokane Philatelic Club next winter. "This year our exhibit was dominated by collections from New York, California and Florida," said Dr. K. D. Kohler, president. "The men who owned them were millionaires, with whom we cannot compete."

Because of her father's description of her beauty, Romanyan Sing paid $500 as a dowry for a bride at Dinapore. After the wedding the father was ordered to repay the money and was assessed a $250 fine for false pretences.

Birds Wing Their Way South

By LORINE LETCHER BUTLER

BIRDS are the world's greatest travelers. With that mysterious instinct which guides them, they fly hundreds, sometimes thousands, of miles to their destination during the seasons of migration. Their schedule is marvellously accurate; they arrive or depart from a place almost exactly on the same date year after year. Now they are southward bound.

Migration is one of the great unsolved mysteries of nature. Why the birds feel the urge to journey so far over mountains, plains and sea, to the south in Autumn and back north again in the Spring, is not understood. But the facts of migration—the distances covered, the routes followed, and the time of going and coming—have been determined through bird-banding, the process of fastening an identification tag upon a bird's leg.

Soon after the nesting season is over, birds begin their preparations for the Autumn flight. The first step is molting. Every bird acquires a new suit of feathers in light Summer traveling clothes. Many brightly-colored birds, such as the scarlet tanager or indigo bunting, change to sober brownish plumage for the migration, as a safety measure.

Formation Flying Practiced

THE birds that travel in flocks, the blackbirds and starlings, gather in the fields for training, and early in Autumn one sees them flying in formation—turning, dipping, straightening their lines as at a word of command. The starlings are especially expert in such maneuvers. They go through their peccs like soldiers on parade.

The starlings are not long-distance fliers. They usually migrate only a few hundred miles southward, those from the north coming to take the place of the ones moving away, so that in temperate latitudes there are always starlings in the winter. The same thing is true of robins, bluebirds, bluejays and other species that we see in winter.

Some birds travel by other means by night. The large birds, grackles, grosbeaks and swallows, are day fliers. They are strong of wing and fearless. They stop to feed along the way, wherever the brilliant yellow of sunflower or the scarlet berries of hollyhock attract their attention. Birds carry the seeds of many plants, and thus it is that some varieties are scattered over the country.

The smaller birds, vireos, warblers, and wrens, travel by night. They band together as if for protection, many species often traveling in one flock. Thus on an Autumn morning you may be surprised to see a wide assortment of small birds among the trees and shrubbery. There will be, perhaps, a black-throated blue, a yellow-crowned kinglet, a burnian warbler in his gay orange and black coat; a magnolia warbler, his bright colors now subdued, but still recognizable by the white marks on his tail feathers; a myrtle warbler, who retains one yellow patch on his back for identification; a ruby-crowned kinglet and his relative, the yellow-crowned kinglet, who have come to stay. But the next day most of the throng will have departed to continue their journey to Central or South America.

Tiny Fliers Dauntless

THESE small birds are as dauntless as the larger species. Many of them fly great distances. They take off from Florida, and fly across the Gulf of Mexico. The ruby-throated hummingbird, the smallest bird we have—a mere three inches—flies by day with the strong birds to his winter home in Central America, for ruby-throat is one of the most fearless of birds.

The losses among birds during migration are tremendous, especially among the smaller species. They are beaten by winds and rain until they drop from exhaustion. Often they are blown against objects and are killed. Small land birds are sometimes blown to sea, where they fall into the water and drown. Sometimes they take refuge upon a ship and make friends with their fellow-sailors, perching on kindly shoulders and feeding from friendly hands.

Many of the night fliers are killed in collision with obstructions that loom in their paths. They fly against buildings, monuments and bridges in great numbers. Light-houses, too, are points of danger. The beacon light lures them as moths to a candle. Then they become bewildered in the blinding glare and dash against the lamp.

The heavy losses among small birds during migration are offset, however, by the rapidity with which they reproduce. Many of them raise two or three broods during the summer, each family numbering four or five nestlings. Among non-migratory species smaller families are the rule.

A survey of the migratory routes traversed by various species for centuries, perhaps millions of years, has been made. The paths are almost as numerous as the varieties of birds that fly over them, but there are certain trends by which the ornithological geographer indicates the principal flyways, as they are called.

Migratory Routes

THE topography of the country is of course the chief factor in determining the migratory route. The Rocky Mountains, which divide North America like a great wall, prevent an extensive cross-country movement. However, as a large part of Alaska lies east of the Rockies, the birds of Eastern Alaska strike a diagonal course across the continent to Florida and the Gulf of Mexico, where they join the birds of Eastern North America in their journey to Central or South America.

Birds of the western part of the country are not such great travelers as those of the East. Perhaps those of California, like all true Californians, cannot imagine a climate superior to their own. Many birds that nest in the higher parts of the Rocky Mountains, or the Sierras, merely move down into the warm valleys for the winter. Those that leave the United States go only as far as Mexico or sometimes Guatemala.

The Arctic tern is the long-distance champion among birds. This is one creature that knows no darkness. The midnight sun shines upon him in the North, and when the Arctic Summer draws to a close he follows its retreating path to the Antarctic, where he again enjoys continuous daylight.

Champion Flier

THE champion non-stop flier is the golden plover that flies from Labrador to Nova Scotia, then takes off for South America across the ocean—a distance of 2,400 miles. His journey is not ended until he reaches Argentina, 2,700 more miles. In the Spring, however, he returns by way of the Gulf of Mexico and the Mississippi Valley. The Mississippi Valley—luxuriant land of grain crops, orchards and forest trees—is a favorite pathway of birds. There are no craggy mountains nor barren plains, but a stretch of rich country that affords food and resting place for the migrants. Just west of the Mississippi Valley is the route known as the central flyway, the territory along the Mississippi River, bordering the Western plains and Canada north of the Rockies.

A migratory route once established is seldom changed.

Find Old Warships

THE hulk of the French merchant vessel, the Bientrait, relic of the last battle between the French and English in Canada 175 years ago, has been found in the Restigouche River.

The vessel was abandoned by its crew and set afire in July 1769, to prevent capture by English warships. It sank on the Quebec side of the Restigouche River and has rested there ever since.

This fall, because of unusually low tides, part of the hulk has become visible, and souvenir hunters are stripping it. Using simple equipment they have recovered a number of cannon balls, 18th century bayonets and other relics from sand-filled recesses of the hull.

Skipper's Last Muster

THE day came when I returned to the city to live, and for a time I left Skipper in the country. Nearly twelve months went past before I sent for him, mainly because I was not settled and had no home to offer him, but all difficulties were swept aside when some friends asked that they might keep him for me.

He traveled several hundred miles in a train, cooped up in one of those dreadful dog-boxes which in those days were attached to the guard's van. When he arrived in Sydney, after twenty-four hours in total darkness, nerve-racking jolts and bumps, and most mysterious noises driving him nearly mad, he crouched in the farthest corner of his prison and refused to come out. The sudden light blinded him when the railway officials opened the door, and sundry prods with a long stick made him show his teeth and threaten pain and penalties to anyone who dared touch him.

In the nick of time I arrived on the railway platform. Skipper had not seen me or heard my voice for a year, but walking in front of the excited group of railway men, I heard such remarks as: "What a beautiful dog!" "What a glorious head!" "What eyes!" Had it been today, most likely he would have been mistaken for an Alsatian, for in shape he was much like that breed, although an expert would soon point out the differences. I have often wondered why the dog-loving public has missed the Kalpis as a delightful and most marvelously intelligent pet. Perhaps it is as well, for possibly, as with some other dogs, intelligence might soon be bred out of them that the fads of judges and breeders for certain shape and color would be gratified.

I was afraid that the crowded streets of the city of Sydney would confuse him, and that he might bite and fret in a small yard behind a suburban house. But nothing of the sort happened. He settled in most happily, and never left his new friends, or attempted to follow anyone outside their family circle, excepting when I came to take him for a walk, and then no coaxing would induce him to leave me until I gave the order.

There were two small boys in the family, about ten or twelve years of age, and every morning Skipper went with them for a swim before breakfast. He soon became the other dog at the swimming pool that he was king of the place; for he delighted in a fight, and thrashed every dog that dared snarl a challenge at him. His duty was to guard the boys' clothes on the bank of the brick kiln waterhole, while they enjoyed themselves; and right well he did it. The boys in their turn never tired of telling stories of what the dog could do with sheep, although they had never seen him working on a station; but what they had heard from me, aided by their own very active imagination, sufficed to fill the other boys with wonder and a longing to actually see him doing the things so vividly described.

One morning the opportunity came most unexpectedly. The group of boys had finished their swim and were standing half-dressed at the waterhole, when two drovers passed down the street to a public-house with a small mob of about 100 sheep on their way to the stock sale yards. Skipper had not seen a sheep for many months; but now he sat erect, quietly grumbling to himself, and quivering in every limb, eager to be off. Then he looked pleading eyes at the boys, and whined most dolefully.

One of the lads said to the group, in boyish style: "I bet you if I told him to take these sheep to our place he would do it."

Instantly one of the boys replied: "I bet you he wouldn't." Immediately the lad said: "Go on, Skipper—take them home!" No more was said.

Skipper was off like a shot, and swung round the sheep which were nibbling grass at the side of the road, while the two drovers were inside the small public-house having an early morning glass. Their own dog—evidently a poor kind of animal—was knocked flying by this red fury which swept from somewhere and drove off his flock, and with tail between his legs he crept into the public-house, and thus drew the attention of the drovers to the fact that something was amiss. They quickly set off with waving whips and loud voices to save their sheep from being torn to pieces by some savage city dog—as they imagined.

But they were too late; for Skipper took these sheep down side road to the gate of the workshop which lay behind the house where he had found a home. The gate was open, and soon the yard was filled with a bawling, woolly mass of sheep, while the dog took his stand at the gate.

Here he refused to allow the sheep to go out, or anyone to come in, and even turned a deaf ear to the entreaties of the lady of the house who came running out to remonstrate. She told me that he smiled at her and waved his bushy tail, as much as to say: "Don't you worry, I know what I'm doing." But move he would not.

Almost immediately upon galloping two swearing, angry men on horseback, threatening to kill any dog that dared interfere with their sheep. But Skipper stood his ground, and with flashing white teeth and a deep voice which conveyed a very definite message, warned them off, and refused them admission.

Then a painting group of half-dressed boys, following two leaders who were almost transfigured by pride, rushed round the corner and up to the infuriated but puzzled men, and when quiet had been restored, Skipper's history was narrated, and the drovers looked their admiration, and asked the boys to show them what he could do.

The lads had never seen a sheep-dog work, and except that I had told them how I whistled when I sent the dog round the sheep, they had not the slightest idea what to do. But with the aid of youth, the whistle was given and Skipper dashed into the yard, got behind the sheep, and brought them out into the road in beautiful style, where he rounded them up and waited for further instructions.

But this was enough. The men wanted to buy him on the spot; but although they promised a good sum of money, they were told that no money could buy him. But it was Skipper's last muster!

In guarding the boys' pets from marauding cats, he earned the enmity of someone whose cat failed to come home again, although there was no evidence that he ever killed a cat. But revenge was threatened, and the terrible deed was planned and carried out. One day the family had been away for a picnic, leaving Skipper to guard the house and the pets; but when in the evening they returned, they found him lying stretched on the ground, evidently in great pain. No sound came from him; but as the mother of the family hurried to him, calling his name, he dragged a paralyzed body along the ground, and as she stooped he licked her hand, wagged his lovely tail, and then resting his chin on her knee, he fastened his beautiful brown eyes upon her face as if he would convey some message to her, and thus passed away from the world, in which he had faithfully done his duty.

It was a heartbroken family which gathered around his grave in the garden, after an examination had revealed that someone had poisoned him; and it was a tear-stained letter which reached me away in the country, telling me that my faithful friend—my first dog chum—had finished his work and attended his last muster. Even now, as I tell the story, I seem to feel him pushing his cold nose into my hand, as if to say, "What are the orders for the day?"—Sunday At Home.

The Most Beautiful Church of All

WE found the most beautiful church in England one day last week. It is near Crews, a red brick building of last century, not remarkably spacious, with no soaring spire, no array of carving in wood and stone. Rather a mean church, we thought it; very plain and spoiled, rather than improved, by its cheap ornament.

"Well, what do you think of this for a church?" the cleaner asked. "You've not seen anything like this before!"

For a moment we thought she meant we had not seen anything quite so poor, but a glance at her face told us she was proud of it all.

Learning up-his-weeping brush, she looked round the church.

"It's the most beautiful place in all the world (she said). I've cleaned it for forty years, and I've loved it all the time. It was baptized at the font there. It was married at the altar here. I saw my boys baptized and I saw them confirmed here. My husband sang in the choir, and at the end we had a beautiful funeral service here for him. This was twenty years when they carried him in, he slept just outside the door. Robert lives in France, but I never come here without thinking of that Sunday night when he and I knelt together here for the last time. That's his wooden cross over there. I love every brick in this church—it means everything to me."—Children's Newspaper.

The Children's Newspaper

A FEW weeks ago, The Children's Newspaper had a birthday. It was twenty-five years old. It was found when English mail reached Victoria in October (or perhaps it was November, 1910, folded up inside The Children's Magazine, and called The Little Paper. A little paper it was, sure enough. It was about the size of two sheets of a writing paper pad and the print was very small.

But the news was good and the English children and their fathers and mothers and teachers liked it. So the baby paper lived and thrived.

Now it goes all over the Empire. It has sixteen pages each about half the size of one of The Colonial. It is finely illustrated with pictures on several pages. There is a page (The Bran Tub) with puzzles, jokes, a story and funnies. There is a boys' serial story on other pages. The editorials are written by Arthur Mee, and there is news from all over the world.

"Into this paper come only things that time has sifted and proved true, things that matter to us all, things that help to make and shape the future of the world in which each of us must some day take his place," the editor says in the anniversary issue.

You will find The Children's Newspaper on the bookstalls. Young folks who think and want to learn will find much in it that will be helpful not to children only, but to their elders. Get a copy and see.

Perhaps it should be added that the editor is a Liberal and does not believe in war.

The Gipsy's Nursling

(Concluded)

STRAIGHTENING herself, she caught sight of Davy and the dog curled up together. "Eh, the handsome child, and in his night-shirt!" said she, drawing near. "Some cruel mother has left him there."

Nipper rumbled in his throat and bared his teeth.

But as the Pied Piper to the rats of Hamelin so was Ocean Lee to the race of dogs.

"Lovey, I shall mind him better than you do," said she, laying a hand on his head. "Get up, good dog, and let me get a hold of him."

Despite himself, Nipper's angry grin changed to a laugh, his tail began to wag as he watched the old woman wrapping the still sleeping Davy in a red shawl, which was warm at least if none too clean.

Full of wrath at the wicked mother she thought had deserted Davy, Ocean arrived at her caravan.

"Left him at the brookside, she did," said she. "Hoped he would roll in."

But her sons were more interested in Nipper.

"That's a good dog you have brought us, Mother," said they. "Looks as if he could get anyone's dinner down a rabbit hole or in a hen pen. The him to the axle with the other dogs."

"The dog is the child's," said Ocean, "and shall ride in the caravan with him. He'll not feel so strange when he wakes up and sees him. Let's push on Staffordshire way and not unharness till it is dark."

On jogged the red caravan with its white-curtained windows and following of shaggy ponies and slippery-looking dogs, on a journey that was to meander all over England. Nipper crouched inside, yawning the queer "agits," the queer faces, the queer smells.

They seemed to come natural to him. Though he did not remember his mother, she had been a gipsy's dog. Run away? Not he; he had to mind Davy.

Susan Long sat in her kitchen, nodding over her knitting. Life was quieter for her now, work more easy. All her sons and daughters were married and gone, and it was years since she had lost Davy.

Her family were all doing well, and the pain of her loss was dulled with time. Yet, all the same, in the hours between sleeping and waking it was the child who had never learned to speak to her who leaned against her knee, bright-eyed and bold as when she had seen him last. She could put out her hand and touch him.

She awoke with a start to hear her husband say:

"Mother, I am going to drive into Stoke. Would you like to come too? You stay at home too much."

"The last outing I went was nearly the end of me," said his wife. "There is a fair at Stoke. Don't ask me to go to any more fairs. But go yourself, Tom. It will do you good."

So in the afternoon, Thomas Long was to be seen in the big fair ground at Stoke, where the mechanical organ was blaring its loudest.

He was looking round the sideshow when he came to a modest little caravan with a placard hanging on it. "Fortunes told here. This way to the Wonderful Dog." Can do everything-but talk.

As the farmer read the announcement, the artist himself came round the corner and gently picked his pocket of a big bandana handkerchief. Delicately so, the deed was done, it was detected. Long's fingers closed on a dog's lean grey head, silvering about the muzzle. He let go and stared at him as if he had seen a ghost.

"It is only one of his tricks, kind gentleman," said a gipsy, restoring the handkerchief.

"It is my own dog. I taught him that trick," returned Thomas Long. "Look, he knows me! Nipper! Nipper!" For the farmer was leaping up at him, frantic with joy.

"No, kind gentleman," protested the gipsy. "The dog has gone about the fairs for years with Ocean Lee."

"Where is Ocean Lee?"

"In hospital with the frog in her throat. The doctors say she will take the road no more. But the dog is not here. It belongs to Ocean's nursing lady."

"Davy!" repeated the farmer, his ruddy color paling. "Whose child is he?"

"No one's, your honor," said the gipsy. "Just a foundling Ocean picked up in November With the Poets

Boughs are daily rifled

By the gusty thieves,

And the book of Nature

Getteth short of leaves.

No warmth, no cheerfulness, no healthful ease—

No comfortable feel in any member—

No shade, no shine, no butterflies, no bees,

No fruits, no flowers, no leaves, no birds,

November!

—Tom Hood.

November's sky is chill and drear;

November's leaf is red and scar.

—Sir Walter Scott.

Red o'er the forest peers the setting sun,

The line of yellow light dies fast away

That crowned the eastern cope, and chill

—Keble.

November chill blows loud—angry sigh;

The shortening Winter day is near a close;

The busy bees retreating frae the plough;

The blackening trains of crows to their roosts.

The toil-worn collier frae his labor goes.

—Robert Burns.

April, June and September;

Twenty and eight hath February alone,

—Harrison.

Than those November skies

Is no sky lovelier. The clouds are deep;

Into their grey the subtle spires

Of color creep, changing that high

austerly to delight.

Be Still

THIS advice, given by a naturalist to English children, should be heeded by those boys and girls who love birds and wild creatures:

It will not be easy for our readers to be still, and it is not natural for them to be always or even generally still. But if they wish to see things, or if they would hear the music of the Earth, they must learn to be quiet.

The timid creatures of the moors and the woods will not come out of their hiding-places if we are moving about or speaking loudly. We must be still if we are to see them.

Last Summer one of our correspondents saw a hare in a Scottish glen among the Highlands. It ran along without fear to within five yards of him; he had stood perfectly still, but with a wild surprise the hare looked up; then it about-turned and ran away. Such a near-view is not often won by a townsman, and never is it won unless he is prepared to wait in stillness.

The countryside is full of sweet sounds, but if we are to hear them we must learn sometimes to be still. There may be voices always, speaking, but if we are not listening we shall not catch them; and listening is only one way of being quiet.

There have been some observers with no more powers of seeing and hearing than we have, but for them a walk in the country meant friendly encounters with timid and gentle creatures. When they entered a wood they took care not to interrupt the busy scene. But we may rush into it with a loud clatter, and at once all the inhabitants take cover.

"I don't see what you see," a lady once said to a great painter.

"Don't you wish you could?" he answered. "We don't see what Gilbert White saw in Selborne, or Richard Jefferies in Sussex; but if we really wish we could, we must be still."

Errand Boys on Their Mettle

MAIDSTONE, the county town of Kent, as the following article, taken from The Children's Newspaper, will show. The city which encourages its lads deserves to have good citizens. "Men are only boys grown tall."

Anybody who did not know that among the most famous products of Maidstone are its errand boys would have opened his eyes the other day at the sight of fifty-five of them assembled altogether.

Spick and span, neat and trim, they stood awaiting the signal from the mayor and corporation to set out on their lawful occasions. Then they started forth in two sections, on foot and on cycles, and still the wonder did not cease.

There was no whistling by these earnest lads; they did not stop at street corners to converse with their friends. Those on cycles refrained from going carelessly along ringing their bells to startle pedestrians. They observed the traffic crossing at the railway, and did not disturb the traffic, delivered their parcels at the right address, and did not stop to chaff the cook.

The explanation of these minor miracles is that this was the annual Errand Boys' Derby, established five years ago by the mayor, with a champion cup for the errand boy who should deliver three envelopes at three addresses with the greatest swiftness, accuracy and politeness.

There were two races in one, a five-mile cross-town journey for the cyclists and two miles for those on foot, and as, besides the champion cup, five other prizes were won, it is clear that Maidstone has established a new standard for its errand boys.

Lincoln

There was a boy of other days,
A quiet, awkward, earnest lad,
Who trudged long weary miles to get
A book on which his heart was set—
And then no candle had!

He was too poor to buy a lamp,
But very wise in woodmen's ways.
He gathered seasoned bough and stem,
And crisscrossed leaf, and kindled them
Into a ruddy blaze.

Then as he lay full length and read,
The firelight flickered on his face,
And etched his shadow on the gloom,
And made a picture in the room,
In that most humble place.

The hard years came, the hard years went,
But gentle, brave, and strong of will,
He met them all. And when today
We see the pictured face, we say,
"There's light upon it still."

—Nancy, Byrd Turner, in "One Hundred Best Poems."

About Ben Adhem

About Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw, within the moonlight of his room,
Making it rich, and like a Tigris in bloom.

An angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?"—The vision railed its head.

"And is mine one?" said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still; and said, "I pray thee, then,
Write me as one that loves his fellow-men."

The angel wrote, and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great wakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God
Had blessed.

And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.
—Leigh Hunt.

The Love of Clouds

AS to clouds, an illuminating study may be made of their effect upon the Oriental and the Westerner. To the Westerner the term cloud is always associated with darkness, gloom, dullness of temper. To the Oriental not always. This term is often used to inspire a sense of grandeur, loftiness, even brightness. One wonders how Western people have been reading the Bible without associating the cloud with radiance.—Inazo

The Old Boys

WHEN Canada began to be a British nation, sixty-eight years ago, there were many boys in most of the comfortable farmhouses of what you call Eastern Canada. Cities had not yet grown large. The log houses of the pioneers had disappeared or were put to other uses. Around the new houses stretched fertile fields. The woods bordered these, and trees were no longer looked upon as enemies to be cut down or burned.

In many places the maple groves yielded the sap that meant to the children what chocolates and other sweets do to you. Hives of honey bees feasted on the white clover and the fields of blossoming buckwheat in the more prosperous farms, and made the supper of hot pancakes delicious.

But we are forgetting the boys. From sixteen or seventeen to the baby in the cradle, they filled the homes with life and activity. Jack, Jim, Charlie and Baby Tom kept mother and sisters busy cooking, sewing and knitting, not to speak of the cleaning and washing. Glad to have them from shirt to cap, with warm mittens and socks and stout shoes, the boys were ready for work in winter and fall.

What a lot there was to do! In the big barn the cattle and horses must be fed and watered and the stables cleaned. If a brook was near, cows and horses were driven there unless the frost was too severe or the snow too deep.

As a rule, mother and the girls attended to the milking and the dairy. There was wood to cut and fires to kindle.

Grain must be threshed and taken to the market and the mill. Pigs must be fed and sheep cared for. In all this winter work the boys, directed by their father, had their share. And it was marvelous how quietly it was done. "I can't" was rarely heard, and "I won't" brought swift and severe punishment.

It was yet early morning when, family worship over, the children set off for school, taking their dinner with them. If the snow was too deep, the box sleigh was filled with straw, the horse harnessed, and bells ringing, the party started, on the way stopping to pick up a neighbor's children waiting at the gate.

Warning themselves at the big stove, the scholars were soon at work under the eye of the master, for perhaps the mistresses, but women teachers were rare in those days.

There was much good work done in these old schoolhouses. Boys who studied arithmetic there became successful merchants. Lads who read extracts from the poets and other good authors have filled the pulpits of the country. There were doctors, but few lawyers or thinkers among the pupils who had started from earliest childhood the value of work.

When noonday came it was a merry crew that bounded from the school door. If the snow was damp, the master often led the snowball fight. If it was frosty there was sliding or skating on the ponds.

If, as sometimes happened, the teacher was a college man, one or two of the other boys remained after school to get a lesson in Latin or geometry. There have been lawyers, judges and professors in this Canada of ours who began their careers in some such way.

The boys who went to school in those early days of Canada have had their share in the pioneer work of the West. They have cultivated the prairies, worked the mines, built the cities and taught in the universities of Canada. Not a few of them have helped in the growth of the American nation. One of these was a Senator who might have been President if he had not been born in Canada, and another has been head of a great university and ambassador to several countries.

In their time many of these old boys have filled seats in Parliament and in Provincial legislatures. They helped in the making of Canada. They were workers. Will the boys of today do as well or better?

AGRICULTURE IS A FIRST PRINCIPLE ON IT RESTS THE LIFE AND HAPPINESS OF MANKIND—Julian A. Dimock

Prevention of Frost Injury To Potatoes Is Important

FROST injury is so important to the potato-growing industry of Canada that it is included with the list of potato diseases considered most objectionable from the standpoint of seed certification. Canadian potato growers, therefore, should learn to distinguish between low temperature injury and the diseases having symptoms frequently associated with those found in tubers which have been exposed to low temperatures. The problem of frost injury has been under investigation by the Division of Botany, Ottawa, for a number of years. Results of these tests show that a great deal may be accomplished towards preventing the losses arising from this type of injury, which occurs in the field, in storage, and in transit to market, and gives rise to such disadvantages as destructive rot, weak plants, and to poor stands resulting from seed-piece decay.

The term "frost injury" refers to the condition in potatoes arising from exposure to freezing temperature in the field. "Freezing injury" is similar to frost injury but is caused by exposure to low temperatures after the crop has been dug. A third type, known as "chilling," occurs when the temperature drops to the freezing point of water; although, actually, ice begins to form in potatoes at approximately 29 degrees Fahrenheit, a figure which varies with varieties or even in individual tubers. This individual tolerance to low temperatures may explain, in a measure, the appearance of frozen tubers frequently scattered throughout the storage bins.

Three Types of Injury

INVESTIGATIONS conducted at the Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology, Charlottetown, P.E.I., show that three distinct types of injury to potatoes may result from exposure to low temperatures, as follows:

1. "Frost necrosis," occurring in tubers having been exposed to low temperatures sufficiently long to cause the formation of ice crystals. When cut open, such tubers exhibit darkened areas of three different types, namely: (a) Ring necrosis, recognized as a definite ring at the stem-end of the potato and due to short exposures to low temperatures; (b) net necrosis, also, indicating an early stage of frost injury and recognized as a net-like pattern in the potato tissue; (c) blotching, which appears as irregular patches varying in color from a light grey metallic tint to dark brown or black. This type of injury results from excessive exposure to low temperatures and in advanced cases the potatoes are useless for seed purposes.

2. "Freezing solid" occurs when tubers are exposed to temperatures below the freezing point of potato tissue. When thawed out, they are rapidly reduced to a soft, wet condition followed by decay.

3. "Turning sweet." Potatoes turn sweet if stored for a number of weeks at temperatures near or slightly above 32 degrees Fahrenheit, a feature due to the gradual changing of starch to sugar.

Not Reliable for Seed

POTATOES injured by frost are considered diseased, and as such are not reliable for seed purposes, because of the retarded sprout development and the possibility of affected sets rotting in the ground. Losses due to low temperatures may be satisfactorily eliminated by the adoption of four very beneficial measures, as follows:

1. Harvest the crop before heavy frosts.
2. Store the crop in rooms having a temperature between 35 to 40 degrees Fahrenheit. By so doing, the potatoes will not turn sweet and necrosis will not develop.
3. If potatoes are pitted, they should have a covering sufficient to prevent the temperature from dropping below 39 degrees Fahrenheit.
4. Potatoes transported during the cold months should be protected by straw, sawdust or canvas. They should be carried in a heated car and loaded so as to assure the free circulation of air throughout.

5. When it is known that potatoes have been undercooled they must not be handled until it is certain that the temperature is above the freezing point.

Storing Farm Machinery to Prevent Heavy Loss from Deterioration

PROPER care should be exercised at all times to protect the large investment in farm machinery from rapid deterioration. Heat, moisture, wind, frost and direct sunlight are the most destructive elements encountered by farm equipment.

Storage means protection against these deteriorating effects during the inactive life of the machines and has been found to be the greatest single factor in prolonging the life of farm machinery.

The most active period of deterioration is during the season of machine use. It is important, however, to protect machinery the year around, from the effects of weather. Generous use of paint on all wood and metal parts, wherever the original has worn thin, and the removal to a dry shed of all staks, canvases, knives, ploughshares, cultivator teeth, etc., immediately the machine is out of use, will help prolong the useful life of the implement.

Cover With Heavy Oil

PACK all bearings with the correct grade of lubricant. Cover all exposed metal parts worn bright from use with oil-crankcase or transmission oil before putting the machine aside even for a few days. This will keep out all dirt and moisture from the bearings and off the wearing surfaces, thus preventing excessive wear due to rust.

Clean all seed from drill boxes, make sure that all dirt is removed from plough bottoms and that they are well greased before leaving. All straw, grain, or weeds should be thoroughly cleaned from binders, combines, separators, cultivators, disks, etc., before greasing and painting for storage.

Bright sunlight and moisture cause exposed wooden parts to warp and crack; paint applied early will prevent this destruction. Metal parts exposed will rust and wear; grease or paint will save these surfaces.

Canadian Poultry Finds Steadily Increasing Demand in Britain

THERE has been an exceptionally good market for Canadian dressed poultry in the British Isles this year. From January 1 to September 30, 1935, a total of 2,331,165 pounds of chickens, turkeys, fowl and geese have been shipped from the Dominion, compared with a total of 852,090 pounds for the corresponding nine months of 1934, and 4,375 pounds for the similar nine months in 1933.

Of this year's shipments, 1,689,750 pounds were chickens, 570,625 pounds were turkeys, 30,240 fowl, 47,800 pounds ducks and 2,500 pounds geese. The British Isles import annually about 4,000,000 pounds of poultry and, according to officials of the Poultry Services, Livestock Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Canada never had a greater opportunity than at present to get a share of that market.

Prices Are Advanced

As a result of the increased volume of poultry exported from Canada prices have advanced to Canadian producers. If, however, Canada desires to continue to hold the British market, more attention must be paid to producing milk-fed "A" and "B" grades. The majority of poultry that has been exported has been selected "B" and "C" grades, the two lowest commercial grades. Reports received by the Dominion Department of Agriculture from Great Britain would indicate very clearly that better than selected "B" and "C" grades must be shipped if the market is to be held.

The production of milk-fed birds is comparatively easy. All that is required is to cull fatten them from two to three weeks

An Excellent Crop of Grapes

Started from a cutting six years ago, a grape vine on the South side of the residence of John Meyers, 2617 Graham Street, this year has a crop of approximately 350 bunches. This photograph shows only a portion of the great vine, but gives a good idea of the fine large bunches of luscious fruit. With a reasonable amount of care, it would be possible for the average Victorian to achieve similar success.

Cereals Commonly Grown For Annual Hay and Pasture

By G. JEFFERY

Foreman, Dominion Experimental Station, Nanaimo

A CONTINUOUS and an abundant supply of cheap nutritious fodder is of vital importance to every dairyman and stock-raiser. This may, in most cases, be provided by growing annual hay and pasture crops. For this purpose it is necessary to make use of plants, the seed of which is not costly, that reach maturity quickly and that give a good yield. The quality, palatability and digestibility of the herbage should also be considered.

The cereals are among the plants most commonly grown for annual hay or pasture. The seed is cheap and easy to procure. The plants grow and thrive under a wide range of soil and climatic conditions, while the herbage is rich in digestible nutrients and is readily eaten by all classes of livestock. Oats are more productive for hay than any other annual crop, and are grown extensively for this purpose throughout the Dominion. The nutritive value of the hay is greatly increased by growing a mixture of oats and one bushel of peas per acre.

For Autumn Planting

FOR Autumn planting, a mixture of wheat, oats and common spring vetch, sown in September or October, will provide a fairly good quality hay if cut as soon as the lower pods on the vetch are fully formed. Oats are frequently winter killed, therefore only the hardest varieties such as Dun and Grey Winter should be sown. As a supplementary or catch crop, the millets may be used for hay. Seeding should be done only after all danger of frost is past, using thirty pounds of grain per acre. To obtain a maximum crop, millet should be grown on rich, moist land. It should be cut for hay as soon as the majority of the plants are in bloom, as the nutritive value of the stems and leaves is then greatest.

At the Experimental Station, Nanaimo, Japanese barnyard millet has outyielded every other variety as a fodder plant. It is a late maturing sort, the seed seldom ripening in this locality.

Order of Importance

AN annual pasture plants the cereals rank in value as follows: Oats, barley, wheat and rye. Oats excel the other grains in production per acre from the standpoint of protein and dry matter.

To obtain the greatest yield of protein from oat herbage, grazing should commence as soon as the young plants are from seven to eight inches high.

Cereals, sown at regular intervals from late February to the middle of May, should provide excellent pasture for a period of about four months, and during the time when the permanent pasture grasses have almost ceased to grow.

Early spring pasture may be had by sow-

History Shows Farmer Is Self-Made Tiller of Soil

ADMIRERS of the eloquent Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier were wont to say that orators are born, not made. The same expression is frequently used when referring to successful doctors or lawyers or preachers. Certain persons evidently were "born" to adorn the profession that they have selected. In the case of the farmer, however, history would seem to prove that he is an agriculturist, against all inclination and that he was originally forced to till the soil by sheer necessity.

The earliest traces of man on this globe amply prove that his sole intent and desire was to fill his stomach from the results of the chase. In other words, he was a "born" hunter. It was only when there was no game to chase, or when the game there was outwitted him, that he turned to Mother Earth for nourishment, and that in a most abject manner. For scores of centuries he either didn't know how to dig or else just refused to do it.

The slowly awakening, primitive intelligence of the first humans refused to encompass anything that did not have four legs. Rather than dig, he caught and tamed the meat animals and established himself as a herdsman. If, through circumstances—war, disease, diminished pasture lands—his herds dwindled, he then, as a matter of necessity, turned to crop cultivation. But it took thousands of years to make him an agriculturist in the full sense of the word.

Cause of Aversion

WHEN the nutritive value of plant life did finally begin to dawn upon the minds of our remote ancestors, their method of cultivation was very different to the methods of today. Evidence of this is found at crop cultivation and fertilization has been discovered in various parts of the world and indicates that man's chief aversion to agriculture was that it required work.

The Basil of the Malay Peninsula, for instance, used to carry the fruit they were eating to a fresh plot of land so that the seeds might spread over the country. Thus, while enjoying the pleasure of eating, they could without interruption of labor, distribute seeds to replenish their supply at a later date. In Western Australia the natives were a little more ambitious, and when digging yams, replaced the heads in the hole. Even the prehistoric brain had there grasped the significance of reseeded and furnishing a humus for the soil. In the same part of the world a species of fig was cultivated, at least to the extent of burning down the crop at the end of the season to improve the next crop. But nowhere, for centuries after, man first scratched the soil, was there any evidence of diligent attempts to fertilize the field.

An Intelligent Interest

AS time went on, however, man overcame his natural inclination for the hunt and domination for the field. And once he determined to "make" himself into a farmer, he began taking an intelligent interest in successful farming. One of the first things he discovered was a very simple principle, overlooked by his ancestors. Ordinary stable manure, he found, was one of the best natural fertilizers.

Today lime, charcoal, phosphates, nitrogen, potash, etc., are household words to the average farmer. He knows that by adding stable-phos to ordinary manure he increases the phosphate and gets a super-fertilizer, or super-manure, as it is commonly called. He knows that scientific treatments means better crops and he is demonstrating convincingly that if man has not originally been to be a farmer, he nevertheless makes a good one of himself.

An Unrelenting Battle Is Necessary to Check Virus Diseases

CERTAIN diseases attack some of our most important fruits and vegetables, which scientists have named virus diseases, because they being neither to the insect nor fungoid groups, says Amateur Gardening. They are, however, parasitical, and are capable of being conveyed from afflicted plants to healthy ones by a variety of means. Among these agents of spreading diseases, insects are about the most mischievous, and it is very important that gardeners should realize, when they have plants infested with aphids, weevils, caterpillars, or earwigs, the damage they do may not be confined to robbing the energy of the specimen upon which they chance to be seen, but some of the pests may pass from an unhealthy plant to a healthy one and inoculate it with the virus.

Pruning first a diseased plant or bush, and then a healthy one with the same tool is an almost certain way of transmitting the disease to the fresh plant, and even rough handling first the one and then the other, or allowing branches of neighboring plants to touch each other when blown by the wind may work the mischief.

WHEN it is mentioned that reversion in black currants, mosaic in raspberries, potatoes, tomatoes, and of other crops are virus diseases, to which the foregoing remarks apply, it will be apparent that the risk of those troubles becoming a serious scourge throughout British gardens is really great, unless and until all gardeners are made alive to the fact that the greatest possible precaution is vitally necessary to prevent these plagues becoming rampant.

Nurserymen and growers for market are well aware that they must, in their own interests, keep their stock clear of insects, and also that it is cheaper and safer to burn the first examples in a batch of young bushes, raspberry canes, or tomato plants which reveal the symptoms of virus diseases. But, no matter how scrupulous and watchful commercial growers may be, their fight against plant foes is a losing battle so long as owners of private gardens harbor afflicted trees and plants, and allow them to act as hosts both to the diseases and all manner of insect pests.

Every garden would afford greater enjoyment and yield more serviceable crops if its occupants were freed from their enemies, but, whilst keen amateur gardeners, fully alive to this simple truth, exercise all possible effort to keep their gardens clean and their plants healthy, there are, unfortunately, many who prefer to leave things to chance.

Thoughtless Neighbors

IT is too much to suppose that all such easy-going folk would take heed if told that their neglect is inflicting undeserved injury upon neighbors, who are doing their utmost in the incessant war that has to be waged against these scourges, but we believe a large proportion of those who are neglectful through thoughtlessness would realize they have an obligation to their fellows if it could be brought plainly to their notice that, without concerted effort and co-operation, there is a danger that some of our most valued fruits and vegetables may be practically exterminated by their natural enemies.

Mosaic, spindle, and other diseases of potatoes must be fought by every means available. So, too, must virus diseases of strawberries, raspberries and tomatoes, and reversion in black currants. Spraying against insects is a great factor in this connection, and although not exactly a pleasant pastime, it is really a simple task. Fungicides and distributing appliances are available in abundance, and instructions regarding their use is within reach of all.

So far as bushes of plants already attacked by virus diseases are concerned, it is infinitely better to get them out of the ground and burn them at once than to allow them to remain and jeopardize their healthy neighbors.

The Lily of the Valley Is Easiest of All Bulbs to Force Into Bloom

BESIDES being a fine Spring garden flower, for indoor planting, the lily of the valley is unique. Easiest of all bulbs to force into flower, they are deliciously fragrant as well as beautiful. The prepared bulbs or pups as the seedmen call them, which are laid in cold storage in a dormant condition, are available to everyone, and this modern way to plant them does away with the trouble of digging them from the garden.

Many like to prepare their own pups from the garden, however, and this may be easily done. Pot them as you take from the garden and allow them to freeze. Then bring them into the house and set in a sunny window. The only requisite to be sure of bloom is that a blooming sized pup is planted; the tiny being already formed and dormant in the pup.

Prepared pups are so certain to bloom that it is hardly worth while to dig them in the garden. One month is all that is needed to get bloom from potted pups; a little longer if you dig them yourself.

Specially Prepared

LILIES of the valley bulbs or pups must be specially prepared for forcing, and come out of cold storage when you plant them. Do not buy more at a time than you wish to plant, as they spoil quickly after being taken out of storage. Instead of pebbles use moss to hold them upright in the bowl. Pack the moss loosely about them and keep them in a warm, dark closet, with temperature about sixty-five degrees, until leaves and spikes are well developed. If you have no dark closet, an inverted flower pot over the bowl will shade them.

When buds have formed, if they are exposed to the light gradually the color of the foliage will develop best, and by the time the fragrant, bell-shaped flowers are open the leaves will be a delicate green. It takes about twenty-one days to produce flowers.

Big Reduction Shown in the 1935 Potato Crop

AS a result of reduced acreage and summer drought, the 1935 production of potatoes shows a decrease of 20.3 per cent compared with 1934, according to the first estimate of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Lower acreages were planted to potatoes in each of the nine provinces, but the reduction in production were confined to the Maritime and Eastern provinces and British Columbia. Each of the Prairie provinces shows an increased yield over the extremely poor harvest of 1934; the total increase for the three provinces amounting to 2,896,000 cwt., or 36 per cent.

The crop in the Maritime Provinces is placed at 9,010,000 cwt., a reduction of 5,209,000 cwt., or 37 per cent. The Quebec production is lowered by 2,808,000 cwt., or 20 per cent, while the Ontario production is down 4,221,000 cwt., or 36 per cent. British Columbia also has a lower production, 1,928,000 cwt., compared with 2,250,000 cwt. in 1934. The yields in the Prairie provinces in cwt. per acre for the 1934 figures in parentheses were: Manitoba, 83 (55); Saskatchewan, 70 (28); Alberta, 68 (46).

The first estimate shows the production of potatoes in all Canada in 1935 to be 38,345,000 cwt., or 75 cwt. per acre, from 507,900 acres, compared with 48,095,000 cwt., or 84 cwt. per acre, from 569,200 acres in 1934. The average yield per acre during the five years, 1929-33, is shown at 81 cwt. per acre.

Favored Isle of Guernsey

By C. D. Smith

GUERNSEY has been endowed and favored, by nature and by the character of its people, with very many valuable assets.

It is never too hot in the Summer or too cold in the Winter. It has much quiet charm, beauty, scenery, unbounded. It is a select and satisfied life is unhurried, untroubled, restful. Ocean breezes blow all over the island. Its people are robust and healthy, the older generation enjoying time and retaining youth and activity in a remarkable manner. It has an aliding peace.

During one recent year, Guernsey held the record for sunshine, beating all the British Isles. The annual rainfall is about 36.8. The Winter climate is mild, invigorating and healthy. The average Winter sunshine over a period of fifty years, from October to March, is 532.7 hours, or 30 per cent of the possible.

In London, in 1934-35, there was too heavy, dirty fog, in October, November, much of that time London was repossessed in dreadful gloom. What fog there was in Guernsey was merely light mist. In nine hours you can leave London and be in Guernsey.

There Is No Snow

SNOW is negligible. During the 1934-35 Winter there was snow on the ground only on three mornings, and soon disappeared. On the very few occasions when it falls it is but a slight "furry." One native resident told me, "I remember only one real fall of snow."

I met a friend from Canada who had come to Guernsey to escape the great cold of Winter—the kind of the Maple Leaf, where, over the greater part of the country, Winter often means a temperature of forty degrees below zero, continuous snow, ice, blizzards. In Guernsey he found what he wanted, and now, after experiencing its delightful Summer, is arranging to stay indefinitely. Lucky man to be able to do so!

No place in the world has a perfect Winter climate. The much-advertised California is always hot in the daytime, but you may go nine months there (as I have done) without a spot of blessed rain. That sort of thing doesn't make or keep people robust—only soft and flabby.

Guernsey, I know, would strongly object to misleading statements about its weather. It is content to let facts speak for themselves. In Winter the prevailing wind is westerly, and there are many sunny days; but it is candidly admitted that, when an east wind is blowing, the weather is not perfect. Compared with other places that is not a very serious defect—not very much to complain about.

While heat waves were frequent and distressing in England in the two hottest months of 1935, I did not feel any heat waves in Guernsey; only glorious sunshine, tempered with a delightfully fresh sea breeze, always blowing. On one day, when the temperature in Brighton was 88, Guernsey's was only 70.

Cliffs Are Gorgeous

On the recent happy occasion of the visit of the Prince of Wales, he referred to "your beautiful and fruitful island." Guernsey undoubtedly is beautiful. One of the island's leading residents said to me, "I feel that one of Guernsey's greatest assets is the wonderful wild garden of the southern cliffs—they are simply gorgeous." The scenery to which he referred is indeed a magnificent sight. Mimosa, fuchsia, geraniums, cannelas, all grow in the open in the Winter, and the yellow wall of the national tree of Australia, which I had not previously seen anywhere except "down under," grows here.

On Sundays, the people flock to the many bays, encircling the island to spend the day swimming, tanning and "chilling." These bays are both picturesque and lovely, appealing to all, and it is no wonder that holiday makers from Great Britain arrive every year in increasing numbers. Sporting amenities of every kind are found—swimming, golf, tennis, fishing, bowls, cricket, football, yachting, and in the Winter dancing is very popular.

HARBOR OF ST. PETER PORT

The delightful Caudie Gardens, right in the heart of the town, where one may sit along its flower-bordered terraces and look over the blue sea to Jethou, Herm, Sark, and even to more distant Jersey, beautiful by day, are even more serenely beautiful by night. Victor Hugo, who lived in Guernsey from 1855 to 1870, has a statue in the gardens. All through the Summer entertainments are given here.

Low Income Taxes

ATTRACTED by the low income tax of ten pence in the pound, it is not surprising that many wealthy people in Guernsey, or that others, well-to-do, reside there because they like the charm of the place. There are no death duties. Rich residents want to go on living—Guernsey has the same cherry hope. Businessmen seem prosperous. Commercial travelers find the island one of their best "grounds." The working-class people are thrifty.

Outside the Channel Islands the majority of people have only the hazy idea of what Guernsey is like. The longest part of the island is about nine miles in length, the total area being approximately twenty-four square miles, holding a population (last census) of 41,000. Guernsey sent 4,915 men to the Great War, of whom 903 were killed or missing. "Sir Isaac Brock, conqueror of Upper Canada, was a Guernsey man."

The growing of vines—tomatoes, grapes, green figs, melons, is one of the main industries, no doubt the largest, and glass-covered houses are seen everywhere. The total export of tomatoes in 1934 amounted to 27,000 tons. At some of the growers' houses privileged guests may be offered rare old Napoleon brandy, a choice beverage which ought to be taken in the same way as old-fashioned snuff, in ceremonial attitudes.

Brilliant History

GUERNSEY has a brilliant medieval history. The island was part of the Norman dukedom of William the Conqueror. Elizabeth College, founded in 1560, is a "recognized" school for army purposes. The Ladies' College, founded in 1872, gives a good all-round training—mental, physical and practical. There are also state intermediate schools for boys and for girls.

The states of Guernsey makes its own laws. Many of the laws, regulations, conditions and customs differ from those in the nearly British Isles and are of great interest. "Clanvair de Haro" is a very ancient custom still in force throughout the Channel Islands.

Any person who wishes to compel another immediately to abstain from some action obtains two witnesses, preferably men in an official position, and in their presence kneels in some public place and cries:

"Haro! Haro! Haro! a Faide non princel On me fait tort!"

after which he repeats the Lord's Prayer.

It is a direct appeal to the Crown, and no further action can be taken until the matter has been decided in the Royal Court. Failure to respect the appeal entails liability to a fine. The earliest incident on record of the raising of "Clanvair de Haro" occurred at the funeral of William the Conqueror, but the custom is probably very much older. The last "Clanvair" in Guernsey was in 1930.

Healthy and Restful

WHILE I think of the surroundings, so beautiful, healthy, restful and serene, I feel that Guernsey people are lucky indeed to live in such an atmosphere, whether they are aware of it or not. They escape the "nerves" which affect larger communities where residents "go the pace" and suffer the penalties. Life can be too speedy.

Life in Guernsey is unhurried. Everything is done leisurely. There is no rush or hurry. Comparatively speaking, time counts little. Here you feel you are really back again in the happy past, in an altogether different atmosphere. When I heard one lady remark to another, "O.K.," and saw a young woman with painted toenails, these things seemed out of tune. They didn't fit in. They were opposed to the spirit of the place, and somehow they seemed to disappear.

The retaining of ancient features is dear to the hearts of Guernsayers. Content to let things abide as they are, they wait and bask in the atmosphere of the past, and the cheapening of their attractions by giving way to a juddier, perhaps less pleasing modernity. They are against adopting trivial modern crazes, but not, I think, behind when it comes to things that matter. If present plans are completed, the island will soon be connected with world air travel. And no British anywhere are more loyal and patriotic than the Guernsayers.

"Everyone Is Honest"

It is a proud boast that "everyone is honest in Guernsey." Be that as it may, it is true that many people do not lock their doors, even at night. There is no unemployment, no trade unions, no divorce. Whether the latter is a benefit or the reverse it is not for me to say. Guernsey is not Roman Catholic, the majority religions being Methodist and Church of England.

And now something about the town as it strikes a stranger. "Passing into the harbor, with Castle Cornet (the French besieged it in 1343 and its Royalist garrison was the last to surrender to the Parliamentarians), guarding the entrance, the conjugal appearance of the long line of buildings, rising at once, high along the waterfront, cannot fail to impress the newcomer." Shops are houses, and towering above them and appearing at first sight as if they were a single building, are the houses, they strike a strange, foreign note. There is no small or crowded about the Harbor, which is seventy-five acres in extent, or the dock ing facilities.

From the north end of this ascending line of buildings a winding street leads at once into the labyrinthine atmosphere, "largely old-world and part modern, of the business and shopping district, tightly compressed and unique—the High Street, where motor cars have to creep along at twelve or was so narrow that the sun can only shine upon it when directly overhead.

Old-World Things

OLD WORLD buildings, ancient passages, age-worn steps leading steeply down to the waterfront and built centuries ago, closely wedged, red shoulders and hollyhock together. The church-hill fruit and vegetable portion of the old market there is also a large, fine meat and dairy market where, on Saturdays, lovers and sellers meet, many talking "Guernsey French" (a patois of the old Norman French of the eleventh century), in its stone pillared interior; the town church, too, not more than six feet from the walls of an hotel, all form part of a conception, quite attractive, which it appears, will last as long as Guernsey itself.

Large and attractive shops occupy the lower floors of buildings erected and added to from time to time, a far distant past, and bring back the old character of the streets ages before the branches of London "cham" stores, of up-to-date construction, brought a new style along-side the old, now all snugly together. This was the original best residential area. It still remains as the business centre.

Rising from this attractive medley the narrow streets continue to retain their individuality, adding to the quaint charm. The ancient costumes, partly by old red-tiled streets, not now quite so closely packed, towards the residential quarters, still retaining the touch of the past and the atmosphere of quiet and peace. Then, leaving the necessary speed limit of eight miles per hour, you get out into the country, where you can travel thirty.

All over the island are narrow, tree-shaded roads, the houses along them clean and bright as new pins. Stone granite walls, from local quarries, are a strong feature of all the roads, much like those of Devonshire, but not so much "up-and-down" along. Guernsey possesses a large number of houses of distinction and substantial new residences are being erected in the best districts.

Smallest Chapel

AMONG the unique attractions of the island is the smallest chapel in the world, constructed at Vauquois, as a labor of love by Brother de Deulot, of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, often called de la Salle Brothers. It attracts every visitor.

When I went to see it there were a score of people, some from Australia, admiring the tiny and beautiful little structure, the walls of which, of irregular concrete, are entirely covered with ornate, a delicious molasses abundant in Guernsey) shells and small pieces of broken china. The floor is mother earth, the length fifteen feet, the width ten feet, height of steeple nine feet. It would hardly hold more than a dozen people at a time.

In the walls there are a dozen little slits of stained glass, with an altar and crucifix at the raised end, while through the little opening directly above, by a special reflection through green glass, the light from outside falls down upon the figure of Christ, giving a very beautiful effect.

A Yearly Service

BROTHER DE BEIDAT is making an undying sacrifice, reaching by going down a slight winding passage, and is glad to receive broken china for use on the walls. People leave it outside, and even strangers in Canada and the United States, wishing it to be used on the chapel, send broken plate. The chapel is not yet "blessed," but may be in the future. The bishop of the diocese has promised to hold one service a year in it. This unique work of Brother de Beidat is a real labor of love.

Guernsey had a great part in shipbuilding. In bygone days, when wind-jammers held the sway, one could hardly go to any part of the world without meeting a Guernsey-built ship. Guernsey men took to the sea like ducks to water. Less than one hundred years ago, I am told, there was a shipyard in the beautiful, tree-covered St. Julian's Avenue, on the spot now occupied by a picture palace.

One evening, strolling in the lovely Vauquois district, I saw Mr. E. Philp (a Guernseyman who has recently come to reside in Guernsey from Cannes, practicing shots on the putting green of his beautiful home. He often plays at the time of the Ancrese golf course. While I watched, I wondered whether Guernsey will soon be favored with wide publicity in some of his powerful stories. No doubt he will prove a great asset to the island.

Guernsey is a place not to be missed. I was sorry to leave its unusual charm and peace.

A Threatened England Votes Conservative

By MARCUS ADAMS
(Contributor, Press Canadian Writer)

LONDON.—"When England is threatened, the people vote Conservative." On the basis of this old adage, the National Government of Stanley Baldwin, in reality a Conservative Government, is ready to appeal to the people. The date announced is November 14.

The appeal will be based on the rearmament of Britain on a gigantic scale. An expenditure of one billion pounds to strengthen Britain's armed forces on land, sea and air—especially air—has already been advised by the Government. Mr. Baldwin wants this ratified by the people.

The selection of November for election is viewed with a great deal of suspicion in many quarters here. Keen observers of the British political situation for French and United States journals are guardedly hinting that the National Government has seized upon the Ethiopian war crisis and its accompanying European unrest as a powerful instrument to bludgeon its way back into power in the face of a labor straw vote of 11,000,000 against them. Stanley Baldwin, Britain's iron and steel magnate Premier, stated that the League of Nations has failed, and that the United Kingdom must now remain aloof and build her defences. This is considered to be a pre-election gesture.

Labor in Difficulty

EVEN British papers are charging that the British war office distribution of gas masks and the introduction of "air raid drills" are but election propaganda to frighten the voters. Experts agree that no such preparations, unless carried out on a huge scale at tremendous cost, are practical.

Meanwhile, the British Labor party finds itself in a difficult position of having to support the National Government on its rearmament programme. By an overwhelming vote, they agreed to support the League of Nations and Britain's activity therein even to the point of military sanctions. To now declare that Britain has no need to rearmament in the face of such a declaration would, it is felt, greatly weaken their position. The resignation of George Lansbury, popular parliamentary leader of the Labor party, may tend to split the ranks, hitherto strong. Herbert Morrison, strong man of the party, declares that, while the Labor party supports the League, they will do so only if the League does not become an instrument of imperial ambitions. They will meet considerable difficulty if they accede any nation, say Italy, of using the League for selfish ends—especially in the face of Britain's persistent avowal and Italy's admission that Britain is acting only in good faith in supporting her obligations to the League Covenant.

Once for Disarmament

BRITAIN has, since the Great War, been a strong factor in the campaign for reduction in armaments, and a general scheme is something entirely new and one of the few times in history where election campaigns have been fought on other than a really national issue. Recently Neville Chamberlain, Britain's clever Chancellor of the Exchequer, remarked sadly that Britain's journey along the road to prosperity, a road along which she had advanced farther than any other nation in the world, it is claimed, must now be halted and that all her savings must be turned into armaments because no other nation can be trusted. He declared that England must arm until it hurt—and the people must be prepared to suffer.

Here it would seem, would be the Labor party's one chance to weaken the Government's position by pointing out to the 2,000,000 or so on relief, that if the Government is to spend so much money on arms, where is the cash for the daily living from? While election preparations are working on, Britain's factories are working ammunition, uniforms, battleships, tanks—in short, they have already launched their rearmament programme, election or not. One automobile factory has announced that they can fill no more orders for cars, have turned their factories over to the more profitable manufacture of airplane engines. And they are not all for England, either. Some will go to Japan, some to Germany.

Ramsay MacDonald, who a few years ago declared that armaments, on a huge scale, were never used for defence but always for aggression, is now touring the kingdom telling the people that if peace is to be preserved, Britain must rearm. Once a popular figure, he has become less and less so during the past few years until recently he was superseded by Stanley Baldwin as Prime Minister. This was seen as another election move.

The Government's strong stand on the Anglo-Ethiopian crisis which may now result in peaceful settlement of the affair, will give the National party a strong platform in its election campaign. The British people do not want war, and anyone who can keep them out is always popular.

Now, the voters, thoroughly frightened, the old adage about voting Conservative may come true.

Sir Seymour Hicks has accepted the presidency of Denville Hall, the "haven of rest" for aged members of the theatrical profession at Northwick, Middlesex, in place of Dame Madge Kendal.

Need Jews' Harp Tuners

THERE is a serious shortage of skilled tuners for Jews' harps in Britain. This distressing fact is disclosed by the current number of Industrial Britain, a journal edited in English, French and German by the Travel and Industrial Development Association of Great Britain, largely for guidance of overseas buyers.

Birmingham, which is the only city in the world where Jews' harps are made, has been enjoying a "boom" in the demand for this basic product. But prospective players all over the world who have been taken with the urgent desire to manipulate this instrument are being kept waiting, owing to the way in which the lack of tongue-setters is holding up production.

These men, who are responsible for the adjustment of the metal strip which vibrates to produce the sound, have to be trained for several years. If the strip in the metal is of an inch out of adjustment the thing is ruined. The demand is coming principally from the United States, where Jews' harp bands are becoming increasingly more popular. One Birmingham firm is producing 100,000 harps a week, and the head of the firm recently has returned from America with an order for 164,000 more.

Waging War on the Flipperty Sea Lions

By JAMES MONTAGNER

On a couple of rocky islands off the Pacific Coast, the raucous roar of sea lions can be heard over the pounding of the surf. Here the flipperty family, which includes seals, sea leopards, sea cows, make their home, scrambling on their two funny arms up and down the rocks, and sliding into the white foaming waters. And here this Summer came the Government ship, Glynn, to count the sea lions and control their numbers.

Sea lions have a predilection for herring and salmon, though sometimes they have also found squid and pilchard on their diets, as shown by the examination of the stomachs of sea lions and seals. To the Pacific Coast fishermen, sea lions are marauders. A fishing boat has but to stretch its nets for a catch of herring, and immediately the sea lions make raids on the herring which swarm into the nets. The same applies to salmon fishing. And when the fishermen are not busy, then the sea lions still eat vast quantities of salmon and herring. Nor do these big animals, who appear as jugglers on stage and in the circus, confine their meals to marine fish.

They also like young fish spawning fish and fish eggs. That is why the Canadian Government sends the Glynn, with its crew armed with high-powered rifles to the sea lion rookeries off Vancouver Island.

Dangerous Work

THIS year's expedition found 25,000 sea lions massed on the rocks of East Haycock Island to welcome the Government men. Adults and pups played up and down the rocks and in the water, forming the largest community of sea lions witnessed by the expedition on its annual tours. But the 25,000 were safe, for the rifles did not speak at East Haycock Island. The expedition went nearer Vancouver Island, to the Virgin and Pearl Rocks, where thousands of sea lions sport in the midst of the most prolific salmon area off the coast.

On these two rookeries Government men disembarked, clambered the rocks and with their rifles picked off 623 lions and pups. Last year nearly 800 sea lions were slain. Not that it is easy to kill so many sea lions. There are dangers to the men who do this work. Heavy seas pound on the bare slippery rocks. Spray flies high, waves sometimes sweep over the men. Yet without serious accident to the men, the forays of the sea lions have been carried out in recent years. The aim is not to exterminate the herds, but merely to control their numbers. In the salmon and herring fishing areas, so that they will not ruin the fisheries which bring tens of thousands of dollars to Pacific fishermen.

Great Britain and the Dominions Overseas

Amusing Side of Politics Seen in Spite of Anxiety

Opposition Sees Government Carrying Out Policy of Its Opponents—Enhanced Prestige Won by British Ministers—Sir Samuel Hoare Makes Impression—Baldwin Like Cromwell

By OLIVIER CAREW

LONDON (BUP).—If it were not for the fact that war is involved the present state of British politics would provide an occasion for immoderate laughter. We have had two conferences of the leading political parties, Labor at Brighton, and the Conservatives at Bournemouth. They have discovered much to their own surprise that a National Government, manned in all its main offices with Conservatives, is carrying out a Labor foreign policy, and that Labor is forced to be content with sitting in Opposition, and by the votes of the members of their party, compelled to support a hostile Government which has adopted their policy.

Happy Conservatives

The Conservatives, happy in the knowledge that they will now win the next election, are emphasizing that it was Labor which reduced British defensive armaments to such a state that the Admiralty, War Office and Air Ministry were considerably perturbed when the Government asked them if they were in a position to implement by force of arms any eventuality arising from a foreign policy laid down by Labor.

So we have this peculiar position. The Labor Party, in spite of an overwhelming vote in favor of sanctions, is split on its own policy, and the Conservatives, happy in some semblance of unity, are united in getting increased armaments as a result of their opponents' policy.

The Government fully expects to obtain most of the Liberal poll at the next election. Everybody who dislikes Labor but loves the League will have to vote for the Government, because the Liberals will stand no chance as an isolated party.

No wonder Ministers can afford to smile into cameras as they gather at Downing Street, despite the anxieties of the present international situation.

Prestige Increased

The prestige of the National Government has considerably increased since the reshuffle of the Cabinet. The improving economic condition of the country would, in any event, have told in their favor, but their stand for the League has commanded not only the admiration of the people of Britain but also the respect of Europe.

Some Conservatives have objected because their League policy is the policy of Labor. The Government have scorned these Conservatives because they knew that in the last resort they would have to rally to the Government. Some opponents of the Government have distrusted the motives which inspired the fidelity of the League. Even they, however, have been forced to admit that you cannot effectively quarrel with a Government which does the right thing.

Unquestioned Motives

The Ministers who entered with enhanced prestige are Sir Stanley Baldwin, and the Foreign Secretary, Sir Samuel Hoare. Baldwin's sturdy English common sense and directness has enforced unanimity in the Cabinet. Nobody can doubt that his motives are those arising from a sense of preserving Britain's greatness and at the same time pursuing the peace which is necessary for the preservation of that greatness.

Sir Samuel Hoare, on the other hand, has become, in spite of many misgivings when he took office, a most effective exponent of the Government's policy. His address to the Assembly of the League of Nations at Geneva, although mostly a repetition of what he had already declared in the House of Commons, made an enduring impression, and his clarity on other subsequent occasions has earned for him the reputation of having a "tidy mind."

Irritating Delivery

His manner of delivery is likely to be irritating to those who have an ear for tone in the spoken word. He speaks too much like a thin-lipped lawyer to away the mob. He has perfect command of his subject, however, and a suggestion of frankness, even when he has to shoulder the mistakes and omissions of his predecessor, Sir John Simon. He has also handled the very delicate situation of the League of Nations with time out of his equality of status with Mr. Anthony Eden with commendable tact and loyalty, and thus justifying the daring experiment of having what amounts to two Foreign Ministers which Stanley Baldwin decided to make.

Italians Mistaken

One mistake the Italians have made is in underestimating the Cromwellian outlook of Stanley Baldwin. In his own sphere here he is as great a dictator as Mussolini is in his. He does not have to dictate by color and any of the other adventitious aids of Fascism. He has a truly English suggestion of speech. He has made many mistakes in the past, but they have always been mistaken aims to honesty, for which he has been forgiven. He knows what he wants and knows how to get it. He convinces men against their better judgment in some instances that he is right. He is not persuasive nor brilliant like Winston Churchill. He

OLD KNICKERS ARE VALUABLE

Over Thousand Dollars Offered for Nether Garment of Tyrolean Singer

LONDON (BUP).—The sum of £210 for a pair of old knickerbockers was offered to their wearer by a well-known antique dealer now exhibiting at the Antique Dealers' Fair. The offer was refused.

The wearer of the knickerbockers was a Tyrolean singer who arrived in London recently to take part in a cabaret. Made of chamois leather, the knickerbockers are over 300 years old, and have been worn by father and son for many generations.

With them, as an heirloom, is included a leather girdle, ornamented with heavily silver-mounted bear claws, wolf fangs and similar trophies of the hunt, testifying to the prowess of former wearers.

Several of the members of the cabaret wear similar knickerbockers of ages up to 200 years a part of their everyday attire.

PERRY WILL HAVE WHIRLWIND TOUR

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—When Fred Perry reaches Australia in November he will embark upon a whirlwind tennis tour involving traveling thousands of miles in under three months.

He is due at Sydney on November 4 to join the Australian branch of Slazengers, and the company has arranged the following tentative itinerary for him:

Between November 9 and 16 he is to play in the New South Wales championships. Then he will play his way through country towns to Brisbane for the Queensland championships between November 23 and 30. Then he will rush a thousand miles south to Melbourne for the Victorian championships, followed by a country tour in New South Wales, to be back in Sydney on Christmas Day. He will then play in Victoria and the Australian championships in Adelaide, and fly to Perth for exhibition matches, after which he will sail for South Africa on February 4 on still another tennis tour.

MACHINE TO TEST HEALTH IS INVENTED

NEEDLE 'FLICKERS' TO TELL THE TALE

LONDON (BUP).—Inventions ranging from a pair of spring braces to an invisible ray for level crossings were on view at the International Exhibition of Inventions, organized by the Institute of Patentees and held at the Central Hall, Westminster.

One machine, described as an auragraph, records the state of your health. It measures human magnetism and is the invention of Major Raymond Phillips. When a person goes near it a needle flickers. If the person is in good health, it swings violently, but if the person is feeling seedy or nervous the needle flickers only feebly. At the same time a line is traced on a moving tape. In that case, too, if the person is in good health a strong steady line is recorded, but if he is unwell the line is broken.

Magnetic Strength

"It would appear," Major Phillips explained, "that everybody is surrounded by a magnetic field, and this instrument records the strength of the magnetism. Some sensitive people claim that they can see the magnetic field in the form of an aura of varying color. If a person is in good health, the color is bright, and, conversely, if the person is not well, the color is patchy. That may explain why the needle swings more violently in the case of a healthy person. Some doctors are aware of the importance of this human magnetism, and are able to detect by instruments whether their patients are as well or as ill as they say they are."

BRITISH MINERS FOR RHODESIA

Twelve Selected for Experiment Agreed on by Respective Governments

LONDON (BUP).—Twelve young British miners who will be leaving soon for Southern Rhodesia may be the vanguard of many to leave the distressed areas for the rich mineral fields of the Dominion.

Their migration is the beginning of an experiment arranged between the Governments of Britain and Southern Rhodesia. It is found that the twelve selected men are adapted to the work, and are able to make full use of their opportunities. It is possible that further parties will follow.

The party will consist of single men between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five. Preference is being given to younger workers and to those able to supervise native labor. They will be provided with free transportation and free accommodation until they actually start work. Their wages will be approximately £25 a month, with possibilities of increase.

"Rhodesia wants British settlers but there must be a market for the goods they produce," said Lanigan O'Keefe, the Dominion's High Commissioner in London. "Happily, there is a growing demand for Southern Rhodesia's minerals. Last year the output was valued at £5,087,615, made up mostly of gold."

Inventor Demonstrates New Device

Mr. Atkins, a London engineer, has perfected a new device which he holds will considerably help in reducing the number of fatalities occasioned by heavy vehicles on the road. It is claimed by the inventor that the device, a new type of guard, which is automatic in action, is absolutely infallible. Here we see the inventor giving a practical demonstration of his device.

Inseparable From His Equine Friend

About six weeks ago this deer, a straggle, appeared on a farm at Grayrigg, Westmoreland, England. It was lame and promptly attached itself to an old mare. They are inseparable now, although the deer is quite well again. The deer runs away at the approach of humans, and this photo was obtained only with the aid of a telephoto lens.

British Airplane to Fly in Stratosphere At Tremendous Pace

Expected to Be Ready for Trials Next Summer—Direct Journey Across Poles Will Probably Give Little Difficulty to Aviators

LONDON (BUP).—Work is now proceeding rapidly upon Britain's new stratosphere plane, which may be ready for its initial trials about May or June of next year. It is expected that the plane will be capable of reaching a height of approximately ten miles, with a maximum speed approaching 350 miles per hour. Up in the stratosphere, with air resistance at a minimum, long distance flights to the four corners of the earth will be made in record-breaking time, and a direct journey across the Poles will present no unusual difficulty, it is believed.

In order to ensure that the air pressure of the pilot's cabin be kept at sufficiently high pressure to enable a man to breathe, the cabin itself will be hermetically sealed and the air supply regulated by an ingenious and exceedingly complicated piece of mechanism.

Once the super plane reaches a height of about seven miles there will be no further need to trouble about the weather, for at this height the only clouds to be met will be of the cirrus type—gossamer threads of ice and snow crystals which float through the rarefied air at temperatures below freezing point.

Air passengers of the future will have thrilling stories to tell of journeys through the serene and cloudless "dome of the atmosphere," while the upper cloud layers of great storm systems are seen speeding onward many miles below.

AUTOGRAPHS ARE LASTING

Many Famous Clients Put Signatures on Tattooist's Own Arms

LONDON (BUP).—There is a human autograph book in a queer little hut behind a building in Jernyn Street, London.

He is Sutherland MacDonald, the tattooist, who has gone about the world for more than forty years tracing weird and wonderful designs on the bodies of kings, princes and other well-known people. Many of his famous clients have personally tattooed their signatures on his arms.

MacDonald has carried out intricate designs on people in every class of society.

TEST HEALTH OF PUPIL FOR WORK

LONDON (BUP).—If a suggestion of the Board of Education is adopted, school medical officers in Britain will in future decide the types of work for which a child is not suited.

It is suggested that the doctors should record where the children are unsuitable for severe manual work, sedentary occupation, exposure to bad weather, work in a dusty atmosphere, near moving machinery involving prolonged stand, or causing eye-strain or acute hearing.

Cards containing the child's record would be passed to the juvenile employment committee when the child left school.

Surprising Items

The board's suggestions are made in a circular to local education authorities. Some surprise has been caused by items in the list of types of work. For example, it is pointed out that work in a dusty atmosphere ought to be banned for all children, and that a school medical officer could not conscientiously indicate that any child was suited for such work. This applies also to jobs requiring long standing or involving eye-strain.

The board's central purpose, however, is to help to reduce the number of children sent to jobs for which they are specially unsuited on physical grounds.

Europe's Earliest Man Discovered in London Gravel Pit

Expected to Take Precedence Over All Other Early Europeans—Anthropologists Eagerly Awaiting Discovery of Other Remains of Same Geological Age

LONDON (BUP).—The first remains ever found of a Thames-side dweller comparable in antiquity with Peking man, have been discovered in a gravel pit between Greenhithe and Gravesend. It is probable that the new "Thames man" will take precedence over all other early European men, with the possible exception of "Pitdown man" from Sussex.

KEEP MILLIONS READY FOR WAR

Troops Can Be Sent Abroad at Any Moment to Combat Pests

LONDON (BUP).—Billions of "troops," for use in man's ceaseless war on insect pests throughout the world, are kept in cold storage at Farnham Royal, Bucks, ready to be sent abroad at any moment.

The Imperial Bureau of Entomology is the depot, and the "troops" are insect parasites of every variety. Men are constantly engaged in the fields collecting the insects and parasites and forwarding them to the laboratory at Farnham Royal, where they are stored. About 10,500,000 insects pass through the laboratory every year.

Performing Mice Cause Traffic Jam

LONDON (BUP).—Performing mice caused a traffic holdup at the Triangle, New Bazaar, today, when they were performing near recently installed traffic lights when they jumped into the road and ran towards the lights, with their owner in pursuit.

The road junction was quickly swarming with automobiles. Leading cars pulled up suddenly to avoid running over the mice, and drivers behind hooted impatiently. A large crowd gathered to watch the fun, which ended when the showman lured his mice back to duty with cheese.

Well Preserved

The find consists of a complete and well-preserved occipital bone (the bone at the back of the head) beneath the skull, together with a stone axe-head found near it. The discovery of further remains is being eagerly awaited by anthropologists.

Each bone and axe-head were found, undisturbed by the normal working of the pit, in the famous "100-feet terrace" of the lower Thames valley. There can thus be little possibility of later controversy as to their geological age.

The finds were made by Alan T. Marston, a South London dentist, whose hobby it has been to study the ancient life preserved in this Thames terrace. The remains are regarded as probably the most important discovery made in this country since that of Pitdown man thirty years ago.

Will Aid Examination

Sir Arthur Smith Woodward, who for more than twenty years was keeper of the Geological Department of the British Museum, and who played an important part in the study of Pitdown man, is to be associated with Marston in examining the present remains.

Will Aid Examination

The period to which the remains belong, Dewey states, falls between two ice ages. This early Thames-side dweller lived in company with such warm-climate animals as the "strait-tusked" elephant, rhinoceros, and a species of deer, all of which are represented in the same layer of the terrace. In terms of dawn civilization he lived at the time when stone hand-axes were just beginning to be well made.

WAS SUPREME IN COOKING ART

Henri Cedard, King's Chef for Many Years, Had Few Rivals

"A supreme master of the art of cookery," was the tribute paid by fellow chefs when the death was announced of M. Henri Cedard, the King's chef for thirty-six years.

The man who, as much as any other, was responsible for the success of banquets at Buckingham Palace died at his home in Cavenish Road, S.W., after a long illness. He was seventy-four, and during his career he was responsible for the special diet ordered for the King during his serious illness in 1928, and during the royal convalescence saw that the meals were not monotonous.

At the Front

He accompanied the King and Queen on all their travels, including the King's visit to the Front during the war.

He prepared the wedding breakfast for the Princess Royal and Lord Harewood and the Duke and Duchess of York.

On one occasion, when the King and Queen were on a fishing expedition from Balmoral, he made a fire on the bank of the River Dee and fried the fish caught by the guests so that the royal party could have a picnic meal.

M. Cedard began life as an apprentice on the Continent, working in the kitchens of many hotels and restaurants before he came to England.

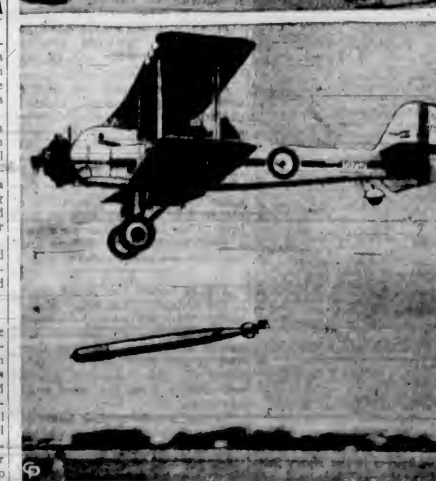

As Mr. Buchoffsheim's chef at Bute House, his masterly preparations for royal dinner parties made him famous, and in 1896 he went to India with the Duke of Connaught, later taking charge of the kitchen staff of the Duke of Clarence's household.

Unrivaled Artist

He became chef to the present King, then Duke of York, eleven years before his accession to the throne. When M. Cedard went to Buckingham Palace he established himself as an artist, with few rivals in the preparation of the royal dishes.

In May this year he was one of the judges in the Savoy Hotel Silver Jubilee prize contest, open to the world, for the most nutritious, appetizing and easily prepared vegetable soup made from ingredients available to the poorest home. The winner was a British army cook, Staff-Sergeant Brown. M. Cedard leaves a widow and two daughters.

A New British Airplane

The British Royal Air Force recently completed tests in which speedy two-seater scouting airplanes were used to carry huge torpedoes. The airplanes were manoeuvred over the objectives and then the torpedoes were released from beneath the airplane's fuselage. At top, mechanics are shown affixing the deadly explosive to the bottom of the airplane. Below, a torpedo being released from one of the airplanes.

What's New and Interesting for the Women

Mothers Practice Cruelties

By KATHLEEN MORRIS

Don't ever tell small children that they are cowards, that they are shy, that they are afraid, that they are going to have a hard time in school, that maybe some day Mother and Dad will be too poor to keep the car.

These are only a few of the hundred bugaboos that some of the best intentioned mothers in the world put in their children's paths. It is amazing and heartbreaking to hear, then, of the sort of thoughtless chatter, all that sheer loving physical care has been building up.

"She's got the Browns' weak eyes. He's afraid of anything that whistles. I think she's in for one of her awful chest colds again. Probably next year we won't be able to afford a trip to the beach, if dad's business goes on getting worse. Look at the funniest little freckled face you ever saw! Come here, little Straighthead, and look at this little girl's lovely curls! We're rather subdued today because we got a good spanking this morning for being saucy. All Tom's people are terribly rude, you know. Don't try to eat that with the other children, dear, remember that you've got your poor grandma's weak stomach."

Devoted mothers will toss off such remarks as these all through a sensitive little creature's childhood. They say them almost absent-mindedly; they forget upon what fertile soil this seed is falling. They presently wonder innocently why the boy of ten has hang-dog awkward manner, not remembering that he has been told since he could understand words at all that when he comes stamping in his muddy boots he disturbs everyone. They wonder why his little sister hates school and doesn't make friends; little sister, who has had a long training in reproval because she is shy, who has been laughed at because she never can think of anything to say, who has been told she hasn't pretty manners like the other little girls.

One mother I know so laughed at and shamed a fine little son that he hated to be in her company. He became a little solitary, hanging his head when called in for meals. The younger child was his darling. The use could do no wrong. The mother laughed mischievously at the boy's baby jealousy. "Look what motherly Denise look at your sister's big blue eyes—go away, baby, she's leaving her supper and she mustn't be disturbed. On one occasion she punished the little boy severely for bringing in some great wet lilies from the garden and dropping them into the crib. They shouldn't have been picked by the small innocent hands, and they actually did give the baby a cold, but what sort of mother is so timid that she can't see the brotherly love, the generous desire to do something for the baby behind the mistaken offering?"

This particular mother had the secret sorrow of losing her exquisite daughter. She told me in bitter disillusionment the other day that the son is married, has a devoted wife and three children. "But Howard's cold," she said. "I never see him. You'd think I meant nothing to him."

To tell a little girl that she has weak lungs is one way of starting her toward that constant measliness and consciousness of trouble that often begins in childhood. The stress, the timidity, the plainness, the mistakes of a child are merely making it impossible for her to be anything else than timid, plain, stupid. The very mothers who destroy their children with these careless, unkind comments can remember—they must remember—how they themselves suffered in childhood from the unthinking, cruel words of impatient adults or unsympathetic teachers.

Even animals are hurt by laughter. Children are mortally injured by it. To laugh at the big ears, at the child's mispronunciation of a word, at the easily making that came out a hopeless mess of sugar, is often to do something to soul structure that all the years never will undo.

We can't spare their shocks and hurts and humiliations as they grow older, but we can lessen the effect of the cruelty and coldness they are inevitably going to meet with a background of love and courage and confidence.

Avoid Personalities

We grown-ups consider a good manner to avoid personalities in conversation. We don't tell the adult members of the family that their weak eyes give them a queer expression, or laugh at them for spending ten dollars for the thing that need only have cost them three, or beg them to keep quiet for five minutes and let someone else do the talking. We never attempt to punish them for hanging late for breakfast glasses or spilling milk. They can talk with their mouths full, refuse their vegetables, come late to meals, pick out the biggest ones, interrupt, put their elbows on the table; they can even quarrel, misbehave, and the children have to accept all this in silence. But let a child try just one of these things, and the result is a blast of criticism that scars his small soul for life.

Avoid personalities with children

just as carefully as you do with grown-ups. There are other and better ways of guiding them than making them ashamed and self-conscious. Self-consciousness is a dreadful thing in anyone; criticism develops it. The unconscious happy, beloved child, the child whose spirit is free, will quickly learn to do as his elders do in minor matters of manners and words and actions. But the minute he is made miserably aware of his own clumsy little, untrained person, all development stops; he can do nothing right after that.

A timid woman, to avoid getting her feet muddy, will quite casually walk on a narrow plank that is laid on the wet path or lawn. If she has to carry a baby and a suitcase, she undertakes the twenty-foot trip just as cheerfully.

But put that plank over an open space between two too fifty feet up in the air, and ask her to carry herself—much less the baby and the bag!—across that dizzy space, without a hand-rail or a rope, and not one woman in fifty would dare attempt it.

The child is in something of the same position. Let him alone, let him follow his own impulses, and if he is a fine child you will be amazed at his rapid growth in culture. But harass him, blame him, watch him, and all the natural impulses are repressed by fear and shame and resentment.

If he is rude, watch for the first spark of good manners, and praise him for that. Express your astonishment that he can be so sweet when he tries. Contrive for him occasions when he can show how polite he is growing. If he is shy, ignore him until he feels quite comfortable beside you, quite sure that you will not betray him and laugh at him, and then congratulate him on his friendliness. Sometimes a sick puppy for a small, strange friend will bring out a shy child astonishingly. One bashful little girl I knew grew quite bold, and enchantingly entertaining, when she was given a whole basketful of kittens to raise, and to place in good homes. The secret with a shy child is naturally to make him forget himself.

Give Praise

Discriminating and affectionate praise is better for children than any rules or any punishment, just as it is better for us all. If any woman learns that some other woman in the club said of her that she was always charitable in speech, she immediately becomes more kind to her attitude toward everyone. If a friend turns to you with, "Mary, I can't do you because you never fail me," then you are pretty sure not to fail her. Many of us are honest and clean and careful in speech and act because the society in which we live quite simply expects honesty and cleanliness and decency from us.

It is exactly the same with children. When you build into their minds and souls the consciousness of the code you do all that can be done. Until they awaken individually to a sense of responsibility, a pride in duty and free will, nothing will change them, not punishment nor scorn nor sarcasm nor advice nor laughter.

But whether with praise or blame, be sparing where the children are concerned. Leave the young plants alone. Don't make every exaggeration a lie, every misdeed an imperfection, every broken or hanged door a crime. Let them eat, sleep, play like the little animals they are, without the constant fear that the grown-ups are going to notice them. The days when the nursery was a constant scene of accusation, cross-examination and sentence have long gone by, and we may thank God for it.

Heiress on Exploring Trip With Dad

DOROTHY JANE SNYDER, 21, heiress to the Harry Snyder oil wealth of Montreal and Chicago, is the only girl in an expedition to the Far North which her father has organized. Miss Snyder will assist her father in collecting specimens for the Museum of Natural History, New York, and the National Museum, Ottawa.

Quaint, Simple Is the Styling Of Many Formal Frocks Made of Rich Fabrics

Black Silk Velvet Gown With Coarse, Heavy Lace Collar.

Black Faille Silk Taffeta Gown With Bandings of Puffed Black Silk.

QUAINTLY and simply styled of rich materials are many of the more formal frocks of the season.

You can be draped and swirled and pleated and puffed if you prefer that sort of thing, and very smart and up-to-date you will look, too. But the plain lines cut with graceful fullness are enormously fashionable, and so becoming.

The two models shown illustrate the point. The one at the left is a black faille silk taffeta evening gown with bandings of puffed black silk velvet on the bodice and hem. The skirt is flared and the neckline has an off-the-shoulder effect, set off in front by a multi-colored jeweled clip. Short black velvet gloves are worn with this dress.

The high-necked evening gown is pictured right. It is a Lyons black silk velvet with a sweeping silhouette. It has double puffed sleeves and a little Lord Fauntleroy collar of heavy, coarse lace with a narrow ribbon tie. It's simply tops for the demure damsel.

The new velvets for the season are very lovely, and famous dress-makers have used them freely, both for day and formal dresses and suits. There is a changeable silk velvet, used for evening gowns, and a broad silk that is borrowed from the Venetians. Taffeta backed silk velvet is another lovely fabric, and comes in monochrome and changeable versions. "Lace" velvets are smart, and stiff silk velvet is new, and is the type used for the dress pictured.

Evening Gown Cut Low But Cocktail Frock Stays High

By MOLLIE MERRICK
(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

HOLLYWOOD.—Butt on your throat at once; under your chin or fold that scarf clear up to the base of your neck and clip it with the biggest, most glittering clip you can find, for—

After 6 o'clock you are going to wear low décolletage in front for the change. So your morning frocks, your afternoon shopping blouses and your cocktail frocks may still button right as tight. And if you're boasting of this fact, cocktail clothes in Hollywood, that is, high in the throats, for there follows the dramatic low-front evening gown to give emphasis to the changing hour.

Lean Arthur wears one of the new cellophane fabric cocktail frocks of black with gold kid pockets and gold kid collar for high lights. The collar is small and cut round at the edges to give an illusion effect. Low-heeled black suede pumps make variance from the glitter of the frock. Miss Arthur's blonde hair is piled high at the back of her head in loose curls and a long swirled hair softens and feminizes the whole picture.

A good beauty hint is not amiss at the moment. And many of the Hollywood beauties who have loll on the beaches all Summer are having dizzy moments when they look at that superb "V" right where the new low-necked gowns will display it to the most eager advantage.

So they are doing their hours of reading all wrapped up in a sheet with good old garden variety of honey smeared on the throat. Nothing removes the irritation of sun-burned skin like honey. Follow a half hour of this treatment with a dash of ice. The result is more than satisfying—Clarette Colbert admits it.

Nobody wears the clothes of the moment—whatever they may happen to be—like Clarette Colbert. When she elects white for a six-day luncheon appointment, it is white with a difference. The other day it happened to be a tailleur of white crash. Its inverted pleats swung from a yoke in back, its broad white stitched belt, its very straight on her red head, its little skirt cut on the straight in back and on the bias in front were all marvels of the tailor's art.

She topped it with a chic sailor hat of white clip straw. Flashed very straight on her red head, it carried a single carnation at the front of the crown. It was the sort of uncompromising hat a beauty may wear and feel at ease.

Down the front sat Betty Carbone with another hat of the single carnation garnishing variety. This one, of black tulle, was also worn straight across the brow. It bent down suddenly back and front, and the front of the crown—dead center, if you please—carried a single shaggy red carnation.

A black and red print gown was worn with this hat. The field of black was broken at far intervals by a very small red design. Black gloves and black gabardine pumps favored everyone that some of our beauties are going to wear Autumn frocks even if the thermometer is high.

Margaret Sullivan wears no hats in daytime. The shaggy carnations, the funny knots of bird flowers, the daring departures into fields untouched for seasons have no lure for her. She speeds a cross town in her roadster—the sun and wind hold no terrors for her. And she wears the smartest-knit cloth of any Hollywood girl. Platinum grey hand-knit suit is accented by a scarf of the new duobrown shade, and sandals of duobrown suede give that final perfect touch.

To make matches waterproof, dip them in melted paraffin. Use the paraffin while very hot.

FACTS AND FANCIES

Cover grease-stained cloth with a mild soap and let it stand two hours. Wash out with warm water and soap. Egg yolk stains, soak and then rub with warm water and soap.

To temporarily repair a leak in a water pipe, use ordinary yellow soap and a little whiting mixed with just enough water to make a thick paste. Bind over the leak and it will prove satisfactory until the plumber arrives.

Don't throw away meat scraps, gravy, etc. Save in covered glass jar and use for soup, croquettes or hash.

Call Expert

In buying an already built house one sometimes may find cracks in ceilings and walls. There are nearly half a hundred reasons for these cracks. Some of them imply poor construction and others are not serious and may be remedied easily. However, if a buyer knows nothing about cracks and sees evidence of their abundance on the different walls and ceilings of the house he is inspecting, that is the time to call in a plasterer.

Italian Kiss

Grate two garlic cloves and squeeze the juice into one-fourth pound cream cheese, adding salt to taste. Mix with several tablespoons of rich cream until a spreadable consistency is obtained. Spread generously on slices of soft bread, toast or croutons lengthwise from the loaf. Roll slices carefully, beginning with the long side of the slice. Wrap the rolls in a slightly damp cloth for some hours. Cut in half-inch slices and serve.

Saving Fuel

Cut corn from cob, put in buttered vessel that fits in top of kettle or saucepan, season and, if very dry, add milk or cream sparingly and cover. While corn steams to a delicious creaminess and rich flavor from water in kettle, potatoes, beans or beets may be cooking at same time, though vegetables should be cooked awhile before corn is put in top.

Sauces Prove Your Culture And Ability

By JESSIE MARIE DE ROTH

History may judge a nation's culture by its art and architecture. But a good cook will judge it every time by its sauces. In fact, not only cooks, but some very famous scholars and philosophers have written some very serious paragraphs on that subject as far back as 3,000 years ago, so there must be something to the idea that a good sauce is a sure sign of skill and ingenuity.

Did it ever occur to you how easy it is to make the daily round of pork or beef or veal or fish, to say nothing of vegetables and standard desserts, blossom out as brand new diet creations with all the snap and zest of a new Autumnal flavor? By serving them up with different sauces every now and then. Some positively "mouth watering" dishes can be concocted by the subtle aid of a good sauce lender.

Prodigy Spends Most of Day Working

CATHERINE STATTON

By CHARLOTTE WEBSTER
Central Press Correspondent

THE days are too short for thirteen-year-old Catherine Statton, of Oakland, California, a piano prodigy, who already owns a high school diploma and has "so much to learn" that she lives "wasted" four hours sleeping, from 8 p.m. to midnight, and then studies eleven hours and practices nine hours seven days a week.

She wants to be a great concert pianist, and already knows 400 compositions by memory, exclusive of which are sonatas by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. She also wants to know all about philosophy, the sciences, mathematics and languages fluently.

Catherine lives like a hermit, working 140 hours a week at her music and studies, never taking time off for any amusement or exercise. A new-made chart outlines her daily schedule, which consists of piano practice, alternated hourly with other studies, and even during the forty-five minutes allotted to all three meals her father reads history to her.

Musically, she has always been a prodigy, having absolute pitch and a phenomenal ear and photographic memory. She also composes.

The wonder-child thinks girls of her own age silly, hate the radio, don't like jazz, she never sees a movie or reads a magazine.

ing spice and originality to an otherwise too familiar standard. I am not exaggerating when I recommend that you plan your sauces as you are planning your meal—in fact, plan them almost before you plan each course, if that were always possible. Thinking of the menu that way may change your whole first plan for it, and lend it some marvelous meals.

Frequently a sauce is the solution to keeping within the budget, because even boiling beef can taste like a cut from a prize steer under the magic of the right sauce. Of course, this does not mean that your dishes should develop into confusions instead of solid and substantial courses, so disguised and decorated that only a cooking expert could guess what the foundation was. There must be temperance for any good thing. But just try some of the following—and maybe invent your own, too!

Horseshoe Sauce

To be used with boiled beef or cottage loaf.

Blend together three tablespoons of grated horseradish, one-quarter teaspoon salt and one cup whipped cream.

Tomato Sauce

This is good served with either hot or cold meats or fish. It will be especially appreciated with breaded veal cutlets.

One-quarter of an onion; one clove garlic; one small stalk celery; one spring parsley; one teaspoon salt; two bay leaves; one-quarter teaspoon pepper; two tablespoons fat; one can No. 2 tomatoes.

Method: Chop vegetables, add seasonings and cook a few minutes in the hot fat, stirring constantly. Add tomatoes and cook until the consistency of boiled custard. Strain before serving.

Mint Sauce

To be used with roast of lamb. One cup mint, chopped; one-half cup vinegar; three tablespoons sugar; one tablespoon lemon juice; two tablespoons water.

Method: Wash mint and pick mint from stems. Chop fine, add sugar and mix well. Add liquids gradually. Let stand an hour before serving.

Florentine Sauce

To lend a new flavor to favorite meat loaf.

Two tablespoons shortening; one-half cup tomato soup; two tablespoons grated cheese; four tablespoons fine cracker crumbs; two tablespoons minced green pepper; one hard cooked egg, chopped.

Method: Melt shortening, stir in crumbs, green pepper and soup and cook until thickened. Just before serving, add remaining ingredients.

Ham Sauce

Delicious with roasted fresh or smoked ham.

Beat with a rotary beater one-half cup prepared mustard and five-half cup currant jelly.

Mushroom Sauce for Salmon

One chopped onion; three tablespoons butter; three-quarter cup mushrooms (cooked); two tablespoons flour; one and one-half cups milk; one-half cup salmon liquor; one-half diced pimiento; salt, pepper, celery salt, few drops Worcestershire sauce.

Method: Sauté onion in butter, add mushrooms and brown. Sprinkle on the flour, add milk and cook ten minutes. Slowly add the salmon liquor and seasonings. Serve over salmon loaf or croquettes.

Handkerchiefs For Fall Guy

Handkerchiefs for the Fall season are in multicolor floral designs on dark grounds. They come in all plain shades, say the shopkeepers, so let us be gay.

There are black grounds in French linen hankies, with flower wreaths in delicate colors, and the most popular colors for Fall are greens, bright blues, dark browns and the purples are very popular. There are many which have a floral color pattern in scattered dots embroidered in one of the dominant hues in the all-over pattern. Sometimes the dots are used for the centers of the flowers in the design. In handkerchiefs in one color the embroidered dots add a lot of visual contrast.

Animal motifs are used for hankies for sportsmen. And bold stripes in multicolor or in one of two colors are also used for the type of handkerchief.

Star Advises Movie Struck

Colleen Moore, former star of the silent films, is now showing her fairy doll's castle on tour for the benefit of a million-dollar fund for crippled children, gives this advice to aspirants to movie fame:

"Love yourself a great love, and if in the first few months you make $10 you are lucky. Heavens! clothes help, because they make you stand out in a crowd and call the director's attention to you. So wearing helps so much now. It isn't fun—it is hard work. The hardest, most heart-breaking kind, and few succeed. "Knowing how hard it all is now, I don't think I would have the courage to try it. But I then, which was my age when I began, is a very optimistic age. And thanks to that optimism, I was able to build my doll's house."

Wearing School Open to Women

Instruction in the art of blanket and rug weaving is being given by the United States Government in Wichita, Kas., to twenty-two women who later will teach women on relief this art in which our great-grandmothers were adept. William R. Whitney, of Topeka, Kas., is supervisor of weaving in Kansas, and Laura C. Taylor, of Topeka, is serving as instructor.

More than a dozen hand looms, built by FERA labor, in the Kansas emergency relief shops at Independence, are in operation at the same time. "Opportunity is being given women of Kansas to learn the art of weaving blankets and rugs in order that they may acquire a profitable vocation," says Whitney. "There is a growing demand for hand-woven products, and as Kansas is a wool-producing state, it is only natural that women should acquire the practical skill of weaving."

Belt and Hat In Ensemble

In some of the higher priced shops the ensemble of belt and hat is stressed. An antelope tongue is accompanied by a belt of the same, both trimmed with the same decoration. A black antelope cap-hat is trimmed with gold balls and the belt is antelope with gold buckle. A black felt hat trimmed with red velvet is sold with a red velvet velvet ruche that may either be worn about the neck or to circle the wrist.
